Who is the ideal Michael Bastian man?
A city man in his 30s or 40s, concerned with style but not too preoccupied with fashion trends. I say start with the best you can afford and then abuse it.

What trend or style component would you like to see guys give up?
Those big, square-toed shoes they all seem to wear. You see guys everywhere and they're looking good, then you look down and there they are, those disastrous shoes.

What would you like them to take up?
I'd like to see them get a bit more comfortable with dressing up. Wash away the idea that you only dress up for special occasions. I have plenty of friends who've tried it, and they meet the sexiest girls. Sometimes the guy in the suit is the hottest. iB

NO MOSS ON YOUR FILES

How to Organize Your Life & Get Rid of Clutter* ($89.95) is a two-disc bundle of lectures by Ab Jackson. Call 800-556-3009 to order.

There's something so chipper about Ab Jackson's voice on tape, as he coaches you on organizing the cluttering things in your home and office, that you might be tempted to postpone doing what he suggests, just to listen. Don't! Each section details various problems (like the "The Seagull Method," when your boss flies in, dumps a load and flies out) and then offers tips for coalescing your stuff and, more importantly, parting with it regularly. His acronym TRASH stands for: Toss it (open mail over a trash can, throw out envelopes, place it at a safe distance); Refer it (send it immediately to the relevant person, noting, "Very important for Bubba"); Act on it (don't just nod wisely at it); Save it (suggestions include putting the file label at the back, where it won't cause an obese file to sag); and Halt (as in "get me off your list"). Jackson's multilayered phrases for deterring a boss from invading your busyness with new unwelcome projects are cleverly effective, slightly sly and actually polite. To deal with other unwanted drop-ins, you talk, nodding sagely, while walking them toward the door. Jackson helps you organize space, time, coworkers and those living, wriggling things, your papers.

VAN TO GOGH

The Museum of Fine Arts gift shop (465 Huntington Ave., Boston; 617-367-9300) offers many art-related items, including those inspired by special exhibits.

The offerings at the Museum of Fine Arts gift shop are very fine and classy, letting you bring home the arty flavor of beautiful things. Such decorative items as an Egyptian canine-headed Anubis, protector of the deceased, would make your home très MFA, as would a soft King Tut doll. Each of the museum's special exhibitions features high-brow tchotchkes commemorating the featured artist or school of painting. Currently you'll find "Whistler's Mother" living on in a cup, while Renoir gets splashed across bags. A Japanese plate of an unusual jagged shape would exotically adorn a party table, or serve as a worthy wedding present. Monet shows up on a glassy cutting board, and glass is also the substitute canvas for some landscape paintings, upright, glittering and cheerful. Art insinuates itself boldly in dramatic jewelry—one gigantic silver bracelet with a huge amber adornment would bring you importantly into the room, wrist first. And charmingly painted teacups come topped with their own mini-teapots, truly a tea cozy. Triangular antique-looking decorated wooden boxes from Thailand are functional hiding places for both everyday stuff and treasures, while demanding to be displayed. Of course, lots of art books and a survey course's worth of famous-painting postcards are always available.

Finding The Deep River Within—A Woman's Guide to Recovering Balance & Meaning in Everyday Life* is a new book by therapist and group leader Abby Seixas of Weston.

It's the comforting belief of Weston ther pist Abby Seixas that a place of flowi peace actually exists within us, underne the clanging highway of life. She calls it t "deep river within." Citing sages of t inner life such as May Sarton, who sa "Loneliness is the poverty of the self; so tude is the richness of the self," and Hen David Thoreau, who wrote, "Only that d dawns to which we are awake," Seixas i vites women to "take time-in," to rightfu luxuriate and marinate in fruitful alonene She helps ward off the objections—I'm t busy, I'm not worthy—that we use to ro block this kind of soul-searching vacatio She encourages women to look at and exp rience their darker feelings with lightly tached, compassionate mindfulness, in ar shifting, softening and accepting them "befriend" those feelings. Seixas leads gro of people who are in transition, or experien ing sadness, to the deep river within "to connect with [their] sense of purpose and tap a source of vitality and power." And people who are lost in the shuffle of the n essary, she advises them to find, redisco and do "something you love."

DIVINE DINING

Dante in Cambridge is a far cry from infernal.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

From the time I moved to Boston, the Royal Sonesta Hotel in Cambridge has intrigued me. Just across the Charles from Beacon Hill, a short walk from the Lechmere T station in one direction and Boston's world-class Museum of Science in the other, it's virtually in the city despite its Cambridge address. Earlier this year, the Sonesta opened a new restaurant that has really put it on the map: Dante, a creation of chef Dante de Magistris and his brothers Damian and Filippo. (Chef de Magistris burst onto the Boston gastronomic scene as the first chef of blu, a destination restaurant in the newly transformed Combat Zone.)

Dante replaced the former Davio's, after designer Dennis Duffy's first restaurant project transformed the space into one that is at once grand and casual, an engaging setting for fine dining. You approach Dante through the Sonesta's attractive lobby, the walls of which are covered with tasteful, accessible modern art; its creators are identified in a hotel brochure. Upholstered sofas and chairs with low cocktail tables at the lobby level give way, three steps up, to an extensive bar with two dozen seats and several high and low cocktail tables illuminated by blue etched-glass light panels. Then the space forks into two dining rooms with capacious windows reaching almost to the high ceiling and overlooking the Charles River and Beacon Hill. The westernmost dining room, the slightly smaller of the two, opens onto a patio furnished with colorful tables and chairs and large white umbrellas, soon to be retired for the season.

All this manna for the eyes would've gone for naught if what emerged from Dante's kitchen hadn't been a performance worthy of the stage. Not to worry. Chef de Magistris' cuisine, Mediterranean in theme, boasted creative flourishes framed by classical conceptions and techniques. Tasty tidbits offered as amuse-bouches became positive harbingers of good things to come: on one night, a few grappa-soaked grapes and roasted nuts; and on another, tiny, tender ringlets of squid with diced sweet and sour peppers. Dante's menu offered a reasonable variety of choices, while remaining manageable. Of the appetizers, the mini–lobster clambake ($12) made a playful statement that despite its Mediterranean ambiance, this restaurant is in New England. Accompanying the roasted lobster claw, four tiny littleneck clams and the andouille sausage battered in cornmeal and deep-fried—a down-home corn dog with finesse—was a delectable sauce of seafood-fennel reduction that took the clambake to a whole new level. Escargots ($10) brought a unique riff on these woodland crustaceans. They consisted of six tender, clean-tasting snails, removed from their shells and bathed in a sauce that went light on the garlic and heavy on complexity and nuance (from candied lemon, potato spuma and other ingredients I couldn't identify). Often snails have a musty flavor that is masked by industrial-strength garlic butter, but Dante's pristine snails had no need of such masquerade.

The onion tart ($12) consisted of a small, buttery, flaky, custard-shaped pastry shell with a confit of dark, caramelized onions, topped with a thin layer of savory goat cheese to provide a counterpoint to the sweetness of the onions. A garnish of red, green and yellow tomatoes with fresh basil lengthened the waning days of summer. The final appetizer I tried, langostinos and clams "oreganata" ($14) scored 10 for looks, 8 for taste and 2 for sufficiency. Two fearsome-looking crustaceans, head and all, lay belly-up on a small plate, their tails stuffed with a tasty mixture of pancetta, Sorrento lemon and oregano-laced bread crumbs. Unfortunately, two bites dispatched the tail mea and stuffing, and the tiny baked clams tha stood sentry to the small plate hardly regis tered on my palate.

I tried two of Dante's pastas, the Vesuvi pasta di Gragnano and the pasta a la gui tarra (both $12). The Vesuvio, so name perhaps because the small spirals resembl a volcano, arrived at perfect al dente tex ture, with a marvelous sauce of curri mussels, cauliflower chips, sultanas an pine nuts. The dish would've been perfe but for one off-tasting mussel. I don't kno how this risk can be avoided unless th chef actually smells each mussel befo adding it to the dish. No such flaws a flicted the guitarra, a firm, perfectly te tured housemade spaghetti dressed in sauce of sweet peas, nuggets of hog jow and cream, with a tease of sweet, shredde Maine crabmeat sprinkled on top.

So many restaurants that score wit their appetizers run out of gas when th reach the main courses. Dante, in contra reached its stride with the main even Basil-roasted guinea hen ($31) arrived te der and juicy underneath its golden brow skin, with the delightful aroma and flavo of fresh basil contributing even more the extension of summer. The vegetab medley around and underneath the hen i cluded flavorful wild mushrooms and a te der, roasted cipollini onion, while the ri dark sauce, rendered from the cooking duction, made us long for good, crus bread to mop it up with. One of the f shortcomings of Dante, the lack of rea good bread seemed a shame since it cou be so easily remedied with a trip to Ca bridge's Iggy's or Hi-Rise bakeries. Dant housemade focaccia, doughy and blar just didn't cut it.

Coffee bean–crusted veal T-bone ($3 had been dry-marinated in a mixture of c fee, cumin, cardamom and perhaps cori der, with flavors that turned this norma timidly flavored meat into a mouth-filli array of taste sensations. Careful grilli seared the outside, leaving the inter pink-red and juicy and tender in textu An accompanying ramekin of cherry tom toes, vinegared peppers and melted Tal gio cheese made an extraordinary garnis in courses. Its texture was somewhat bby, suggesting a farm-raised prove- nce, but the sautéed mustard greens and atoes au gratin that came with it made in flavor what was lacking in the mon. A ribbon of pistachio pesto that peared on the plate alongside the mon was overwhelmed by a far more werful ribbon of mustard glaze. Dante's ak frites ($28), an almost mandatory of- ng for a hotel restaurant, refined this ple by taking a hanger steak, a coarse- tured but full-flavored cut of beef, and rinating it for 24 hours to produce a der, juicy masterpiece. Grilled lemon- me aioli, truffled watercress and twice- d, slender frites rounded out the dish.

Dante's wine list, assembled by Filippo Magistris, was thin in the lower price ges, but at $30 the Rosso d'Altesino, a ernet-sangiovese blend, proved a wor- accompaniment to the pastas and main rses, with good fruit, decent tannins d a marvelous aroma. A very versatile é made from sangiovese grapes, the 05 Castello di Ana Rosato Toscano 5), served well as an accompaniment to h seafood appetizers and main courses, d was the bargain choice of the list to t. Dante's desserts (all $9) were exquis- but miniscule in size, and clearly not designed for sharing. Warm chocolate cake with crème fraîche ice cream and a teas- ingly tiny dab of orange reduction made us beg for more. A four-part dessert consisting of lemon ice cream flavored with bay leaf; a lemon cream–filled puff pastry laced with coconut—a macaroon with an attitude; a diminutive lemon meringue, also en- hanced with grated coconut; and slices of grilled pineapple crisscrossed into a star, followed suit. Only the strawberry-rhubarb cobbler disappointed, with the crumb top- ping undercooked. As frequent readers of this column know, I'm not a partisan of large portions, but Dante's langoustine ap- petizer and desserts brought portion con- trol to a new low.

Hotel restaurants in both Boston and Cambridge offer some of the best eating in town. A far cry from the perfunctory fuel- ing station that used to be a hallmark of many hotel chains, these eateries—Meri- tage at the Boston Harbor, Julien at the Langham, Great Bay at the Common- wealth, Azure at the Lenox, Clio at the Eliot, Rialto at the Charles, and others—are attractions that sell the hotels' guest- rooms, truly making these hostelries houses of hospitality. The Sonesta is to be ap- plauded for bringing an eatery as fine as Dante to its Cambridge venue. iB

Rialto Re-creation

Breaking up isn't always hard to do...

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

After more than 12 years sharing in a highly productive, successful partnership that created and ran the renowned Rialto near Harvard Square (along with other Sapphire Group ventures Blu and Noir) Jody Adams and Michela Larson are going their separate—but friendly—ways. For now, they still sound like long-term partners, overlapping sentences and speaking with similar intonation and cadence during a recent conference call.

"As of Jan. 1, I take Rialto, and I'll no longer be a member of the Sapphire Group," says Adams, who plans to close the restaurant briefly for renovations in January. "Rialto is deeply, truly ready for change and remodeling." Larson will move forward with the remaining Sapphire partners, Gary Sullivan and Karen Haskell. "Gary, Karen and I are putting together Rocca," a restaurant project in the South End, she says. When will it open?

"Early March? I'm making the sign of the cross," says Larson with a giggle. And how long will Rialto be closed? "Jody's also making the sign of the cross!" she says.

"Four weeks," says Adams. "It will be sort of a rebirth for Rialto." Rebirth of a restaurant without killing off a friendship—way to go, ladies!

Chef Jody Adams has big changes in store for Rialto this winter.

Recognition has its rewards

Sure, Jody Adams has a lot on her plate these days, but some of it is dessert: Adams has been nominated as Restaurateur of the Year by Share Our Strength, and she's the recipient of the 2006 Women Chefs & Restaurateurs Golden Whisk Award. The Whisk honors women whose passion and excellence in the kitchen distinguish them as role models for aspiring female culinary professionals. Clearly, Adams is a perfect choice for the award: Rialto's staff includes executive sous chef Carolyn Johnson, restaurant manager Amber Renberg, pastry chef Tal Shofman-Schejter and manager/wine director Tiffany Taylor. Former Rialto pastry chef Lynn Moulton is now the pastry chef at Blu.

All juiced up

Just because you're the only person at the table who doesn't drink wine is no reason to forgo the pleasures of an exquisite tasting menu at L'Espalier. Whether you choose the seasonal tasting menu, the vegetarian menu or chef Frank McClelland's "Tasting Journey," you can also opt for a juice tasting. Forget about "mocktails"; the juice pairings—concocted from fresh seasonal fruits, vegetables and herbs—are sophisticated complements to whatever's on your plate. Some examples: Caviar is accompanied by a delicate glass of Sorrento lemonade, with mint that agreeably refuses to stick between your teeth; butter-poached lobster comes with a lush, gently herbaceous cranberry-orange-lemongrass juice; Macomber turnip soup partners with seckel pear and pecan cider; and, best of all, a Concord grape/Earl Grey tea blend (poured from a silver shaker) is richly flavored enough to stand up to roasted beef sirloin.

From beer to beef

The folks who brought us the Asgard in Cambridge and the Kinsale in Government Center are revving up for a new project: a steakhouse in the suburbs. Peter Sarmanian of Classic Restaurant Concepts says Metro9 Steakhouse, soon to open in the former Desmond O'Malley's space on Route 9 in Framingham, will be a classic steakhouse, with entrée prices ranging from $16 to $26. Any similarity to the name of another suburban steakhouse about 10 miles east on Route 9—The Metropolitan Club—is unintentional, says Sarmanian: "There's no confusion so far." IB

For over 20 years,
we've operated on a shoestring.

Each year, events like the Komen Race for the Cure® raise vital funds to fight breast cancer. Those revenues have helped make the Komen Foundation the largest private funder of breast cancer research. But despite the success of our efforts, we were unable to fund over 50% of the promising research grant proposals submitted to us last year. We need your help to extend our reach in the effort to find a cure.

Performing Arts: Bird Up

Job stress, election angst, the war in Iraq… How great would it be just to escape from it all? One temporary fix can be had Nov. 9–12 at the Wang Center, where Russia's renowned Kirov Ballet and Orchestra will present its signature production of Swan Lake. Unlike the avant-garde (and abridged) spins favored by many modern ballet companies, the Kirov offers up a full-length version that hews closely to the original. Sure, the real deal may clock in at almost three and a half hours. But with Tchaikovsky's gorgeous late-Romantic score, Marius Petipa and Lev Ivanov's original 19th-century choreography and a story line that charts the misadventures of a prince who falls in love with a becursed bird, you'll travel farther from the tedium of daily reality than you ever imagined possible. Wang Center, 270 Tremont St., Boston (617-482-9393). www.wangcenter.org or www.celebrityseries.org. —LPK

Music: High on Marley

Establishing yourself in the music biz is never easy—especially not when you're doing so in the shadow of a more famous relative (just ask Roger Clinton). But despite constantly fighting comparisons to his late, great dad, Ziggy Marley, who performs at the Roxy on Nov. 12, has carved out a pretty impressive career. Since his 1985 debut, Play the Game Right, Marley has released a dozen albums, with three of them earning a Grammy for Reggae Album of the Year. In July, the Son of Bob released Love Is My Religion, his second venture since parting ways with his backing band the Melody Makers, so plan on Marley sparking some excitement at the Roxy with loads of new material. Roxy, 279 Tremont St., Boston (617-338-7699). 8 pm, $28. —RL

MON./NOV. 13

Tastings: Get Full on Fall

Thanksgiving's just weeks away, and you'll never make it through Aunt Linda's badass apple brown betty without some old-fashioned endurance training. Start building your stomach's stamina Nov. 13, when Cambridge's best chefs converge on the Charles Hotel's Regattabar to cater Flavors of Fall, a celebration of seasonal food from haute local spots including the Blue Room, Chez Henri, Dante, Om, Rialto, UpStairs on the Square and more. Expect plenty of hors d'oeuvres–sized plates of autumnal edibles—tender braises, earthy wild mushrooms and fancy bites made from gourds you've never even heard of. Whilst stuffing your face, you can nourish your ears with the jazz stylings of the Rollo Tomasi Quartet. Tickets for the three-hour event (including wine and beer) cost $50, and proceeds benefit the Community Legal Services and Counseling Center, a Cambridge agency that provides legal aid and mental-health counseling to low-income citizens. Let the gorging begin. Regattabar at the Charles Hotel, 1 Bennett St., Cambridge (617-441-8600). www.bostonchefs.com. 5:30-8:30 pm. $50. —RL

THU.–SUN./ NOV. 9–12

Books: Divas in the House

Their approaches to the topic couldn't be more different, but edgy comedian Amy Sedaris and former felon Martha Stewart are in town to promote domestic bliss this month: Each has published a new book on the topic. First up, on Nov. 9, you'll have two chances to hear Sedaris read from I Like You: Hospitality Under the Influence, an irreverent and entertaining guide to throwing a party, at the Downtown Crossing Borders in the morning and the Brattle Theatre later that night. Learn the most inappropriate introductions ("This is Barbara—she can't have children"), recipes for delicacies like "Li'l Smokey Cheeseballs" and "Smack Snacks for Rabbits," and tips for freezing leftovers. After the party you'll have to clean up the mess, of course, so check out Stewart three days later at the Pru Barnes & Noble, where she'll discuss Martha Stewart's Homekeeping Handbook, her comprehensive new guide to housecleaning for the obsessive-compulsive. Its cover sports a Windex-wielding Stewart, and inside the formidable Stewart weighs in on everything from polishing the silver to eradicating pests. Get there early, as seats for Stewart's reading are available three hours in advance. Barnes & Noble, Prudential Center, Boston (617-247-6959); 12 pm. Borders Downtown, 10-24 School St., Boston (617-557-7188); 12:30 pm. Brattle Theatre, 40 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-876-6837); 9:30 pm. Free. —LPK

Music: Boston Plays Boston

Fans who've got more than a feeling for Beantown's eponymous rock band can recoup that elusive peace of mind Nov. 13, when Boston (the group) returns to the stage for its first live performance in years. What's the occasion? A concert celebrating Doug Flutie's retirement and the city's official designation of Nov. 13 as Doug Flutie Day. The Hub's favorite sons perform at Symphony Hall, along with Keith Lockhart and the Boston Pops crew, and James Montgomery of the James Montgomery Blues Band. Beyond the smokin' lineup, the night also includes a tribute to Flutie as this year's Red, White & Blue Award recipient, given annually to a celebrity who goes above and beyond in service to the community. Proceeds from ticket sales go to the Doug Flutie Jr. Foundation for Autism. Symphony Hall, Boston (888-266-1200). $55-$150. —LPK

Food for Thought

Richard Linklater's conversational adaptation turns the stomach—in a good way.

BY SEAN BURNS

As a general rule, people don't like to think about where their food comes from.

Whenever I'm standing in line at a sausage stand on Yawkey Way, the absolute last thing I want to consider is what exactly went into the delicious street-meat I'm about to scarf down. But folks who've read Eric Schlosser's 2001 book, Fast Food Nation, can't wait to enlighten you about the horrific laundry list of toxic, repulsive materials you're undoubtedly ingesting every time you unwrap a tasty burger. For this and many other reasons, I've avoided that book like the plague; as a lifelong devotee of the Drive Thru, I just don't know if I can handle the truth.

Illegal immigrants aren't the only victims of Cody, Colo.'s unsanitary meatpacking plant.

Seemingly timing the film to coincide with the 100-year anniversary of Upton Sinclair's earthshaking slaughterhouse exposé, The Jungle, writer-director Richard Linklater has teamed up with Schlosser for a loose-limbed, big-screen adaptation of Fast Food Nation. The result is a curious hybrid of statistics, editorializing and slightly sketchy drama, trying valiantly to cover a massive cross section of American culture by zeroing in on one Colorado town that's kept afloat by countless franchise joints and one ominous meatpacking plant.

Greg Kinnear stars as Don Henderson, a marketing whiz rapidly ascending the corporate ladder at the fictional fast food chain Mickey's. Don's career breakthrough was the Big One—a spectacularly successful hamburger that runs into a big PR predicament: An independent study has determined that there's an unacceptably high level of feces in the all-beef patties at Mickey's. (The problem isn't that there's excrement in the burgers; it's that there's just a little bit too much of it.)

Dispatched on a fact finding/damage control mission to Cody, Colo., Kinnear's exec sits down with folks representing every interest up-and-down the fast-food food chain. This slender dramatic thread offers enough thrust for director Linklater to do what he does best—collect a series of wide-ranging, philosophical conversations.

Has there ever been a filmmaker so in love with the sound of the human voice? Ever since his 1991 cult smash Slacker, which simply drifted without rhyme or reason from one chatty Austinite to another for more than an hour and a half, Linklater has devoted himself to recording the art of conversation on film. With Fast Food Nation, Schlosser's muckraking research provides a throughline to hold Linklater's discursive noodling in sharp focus.

We spend a fair amount of time with a band of illegal immigrants (smuggled across the border by character actor Luis Guzmán). Led by the luminous Catalina Sandino Moreno, who made such an indelible impression in 2004's Maria Full of Grace, these undocumented workers struggle to eke out their own little piece of the American dream, only to suffer ungodly conditions and relentless abuse in the methamphetamine-fueled sweatshop of the Cody meatpacking plant. Bobby Cannavale, such an ingratiating comic figure in 2003's indie smash The Station Agent, will chill you to the bone as a harsh foreman, viciously exacting sexual favors from his powerless laborers.

Bruce Willis delivers a showstopping cameo as a meat industry honcho prone to bursts of such brutal, plainspoken pragmatism that Kinnear has no choice but to abandon his good intentions and sheepishly exit the film altogether.

Linklater instead pins our hopes on Amber, a teenaged Mickey's cashier played by the refreshingly ordinary Ashley Johnson. Struggling to make ends meet alongside her funny, floozy single mom (Patricia Arquette), Amber serves as an audience surrogate, only slowly coming to understand the limits of her grease-trap surroundings. A lengthy discussion with her drifter uncle (a fine turn from Ethan Hawke) broadens the focus of Fast Food Nation beyond the realm of what we eat and into how we live. Hawke's character despairs over the way every Main Street in every small town now looks and sounds exactly the same, as all Wal-Mart, Sunglass Hut and Mickey's cashiers must follow the same home-office-approved scripts for employee-customer interactions. But even he can't deny the boosts such franchises have granted Cody's otherwise desolate local economy. So the question arises: What has been gained, and what has been lost?

When it premiered at last May's Cannes Film Festival, Fast Food Nation was met with mixed reviews, most bemoaning that this talky, laid-back movie didn't feel incendiary enough. If you're looking for a moronic, lopsided polemic, go rent Super Size Me again. Fast Food Nation is not a diatribe—it's a conversation.

And it's one well worth having. IB

Fast Food Nation ★★★

Borat: Cultural Learnings of Ameri for Make Benefit Glorious Nation o Kazakhstan ★★★★

A years-in-the-making, monstrously hilarious, ta no-prisoners extravaganza that boasts at least ha dozen sequences that must be seen to be believ this original and outrageous comedy follows go cult performer Sacha Baron Cohen in the funn of his many sidesplitting guises: Kazakh repo Borat Sagdiyev. Shot guerilla-style, the better to snare unsuspecting participants, the film obse cuddly, gregarious Borat cluelessly blurting ou manner of racist, sexist, homophobic filth, elici some surprisingly disturbing responses from the erage Americans he meets on the street. You'd amazed what some people let slip when they th they're talking to a simpleton. Cohen's uniq subversive brand of comedy is both purposeful pointed: He blows the lid off secret bigotries in o to air them out as rancid stupidity. Whittled d from a mountain of footage into a breathlessly pa locomotive under the expert supervision of dire Larry Charles, there's no piety left untweake prejudice left unexposed over the course of thes riotous minutes. I dearly look forward to re viewings, just so I can watch it without havin pick my jaw up off the floor at every turn. Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Crank ★★★

Boasting the year's most ingenious movie concept doesn't involve reptiles on an aircraft, this prank funny microbudgeted thriller stars The Transpo Jason Statham as a growling hitman who awakens morning to discover that he's been poisoned wit exotic Chinese cocktail. The only thing that can the deadly potion's progress is a constant flo adrenaline, and thus our hero must ingest ma quantities of illegal drugs, while also running fighting and fornicating long and hard enough to his heart pumping—at least until he can aveng own murder. Written and directed by newco Mark Neveldine and Brian Taylor, Crank exhil raunchy, superviolent, devil-may-care exuberanc feels like the work of a couple of fiendishly clever who've had way too much Mountain Dew. Stath a hard case with crack comic timing, and there's lightful bimbo turn from Amy Smart as a babe-in woods who gets the hiccups at inopportune mom Fast, cheap and out of control, this B-movie mash D.O.A and Speed is a cheerful, surreal surprise Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Departed ★★★★

Martin Scorsese gives Boston mobsters the Goo treatment in this wildly entertaining, blisteringl fane popcorn movie, adapted by screenwriter W Monahan from the 2002 Hong Kong hit Infern fairs. Leonardo DiCaprio stars as a deep-cover c filtrating a gang of ruthless Southie gangsters, Matt Damon plays a crooked State Police detect the employ of Jack Nicholson's Whitey Bulge neighborhood crime boss. Monahan's script is a of tightly plotted, trash-talking beauty, while sese's propulsive direction gives every scene an snap, crackle and pop. The all-star cast also in Alec Baldwin, Martin Sheen and Dorchester' Mark Wahlberg, all having the time of their puffing out their chests and hurling arias of obs at one another in over-the-top Boston ac Nicholson does his best Brando impression, g on baroque, bug-eating improvisations with a se menace that's mesmerizing. Never to be confuse one of Scorsese's more soul-searching works, th playful picture, albeit one with a ghoulish se humor and an electrifying energy. (At Boston mon, Fenway, Harvard and in the suburbs.)

Flags of Our Fathers ★★★

Another bold and provocative work from di Clint Eastwood, this film restlessly questions a vestigates ingrained American notions of he As usual, Eastwood doesn't find any easy an Working from a book by James Bradley an Powers, screenwriters William Broyles Jr. an Haggis illustrate the real-life, surprising ci stances behind that iconic photograph of f soldiers raising the flag at Iwo Jima. Drifting and-forth through time in a haunted, almost marish trance, Eastwood's film contrasts the h scorched-earth particulars of "Sulfur Island" lavish, jingoistic War Bond sales drive that fo for three surviving grunts, played by Jesse Br Adam Beach and the shockingly first-rate Phillipe. Although it grows a bit repetitive an propriately sappy in its later reels, Flags of O thers is still a challenging, thoughtful film ma a profound sadness and uncertainty. At a p is career when he's got nothing left to prove, Eastvood is daring enough to suggest that sometimes lies night just be necessary evils, and that whatever the ruth may be, it's probably a heck of a lot messier nd more complicated than most folks will want to elieve. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the iburbs.)

The Guardian ★★½

ometimes clichés can be comforting, which might xplain why watching this pleasingly derivative Coast Guard training camp saga feels a bit like sinkig into a cozy old chair. Cribbed shamelessly from op Gun and An Officer and a Gentleman, The uardian stars Kevin Costner as a past-his-prime resie swimmer making the awkward transition to drill istructor for a group of cocky, fresh-faced recruits. abloid perennial Ashton Kutcher plays his promisig-but-too-reckless hotshot pupil. Yes, it's the traditonal Tom Cruise role—and any personal distaste ou might have these days for Mr. Scientology Crazyints will promptly vanish upon witnessing Kutcher's mbering, charmless maverick. (Seriously, can this d even be bothered to give a performance?) After a lf-immolating flirtation with superstardom, Costner ems to be settling down into character parts these ays, and his dry wit and fussy charm come into play ite nicely here. Helmed with a journeyman's sense craft by Fugitive director Andrew Davis, it's a rdy, unobjectionable time waster that will probably ay even better during its inevitable Sunday afternon repeats on TNT. (At Boston Common, Fenway d in the suburbs.)

alf Nelson ★★★½

Ryan Gosling the next Sean Penn? Evidence conues to mount in this altogether lovely Sundance ash, which stars The Notebook's stud as an innery junior high school teacher who just so happens be wrestling with a rather bothersome crack adction. Gosling's exquisitely textured performance kes you somewhere unexpected with every gesre, and he's matched beat-for-beat by newcomer areeka Epps, playing the one student who's figed out her teacher's little secret. (Epps is a marvel understatement—entire scenes hinge on the tty way she handles a lollipop.) But this is hardly ur run-of-the-mill junkie redemption saga, as dictor Ryan Fleck and co-writer/producer/editor, Newton native Anna Boden, aim to expose a larger generational malaise. Half Nelson is about what happens when youthful idealism goes crashing headlong into our bummer everyday life, and even if it sometimes over-reaches on a few stylistic fronts, the screenplay admirably offers no pat answers or kneejerk uplift. Funny, sad and full of hard truths, the film's final moments are quietly, triumphantly sublime. (At Kendall Square.)

Jackass Number Two ★★★

An idiot's delight. There are few things more subjective than comedy, particularly when the humor involves young men of questionable intellectual aptitude finding new and inventive ways to bash their heads against concrete and cause grievous bodily harm to one another's bathing suit areas. Johnny Knoxville and his gang of cackling morons are back for even more death-defying flights of foolishness, episodes of alarming public nudity, and borderline-criminal misuse of both their own bodily orifices and the resultant waste products. There's no point in trying to convince certain members of the intelligentsia that this sort of business represents anything less than a death knell for Western culture, but it should nonetheless be noted that this sequel is wilder, better-paced and even more cheerfully outré than the original. (I laughed, I shrieked, I almost vomited.) Gross-out movie guru John Waters makes a brief appearance, as if giving his blessing to the onscreen doody-eating tradition he began in 1972 with Pink Flamingos, and a go-for-broke musical number borrowed from La Cage aux Folles is designed to wreak some subversive havoc on the homophobia of the film's frat boy audience. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Last King of Scotland ★★½

The great character actor Forest Whitaker delivers a chilling, towering performance as bloodthirsty Ugandan dictator Idi Amin in this fictionalized chronicle of the madman's rise and fall. Funny one moment, terrifying the next, Whitaker delivers such a bravura, barnstorming turn, it's downright perplexing that the filmmakers choose to keep him on the sidelines for so much of the picture. Adapted from a novel by Giles Folden, the film devotes an inexplicable amount of attention to James McAvoy, here playing a callow Scottish doctor who's seduced by Amin's charm, power and riches. He becomes the self-appointed "president for life's" personal physician, and doesn't seem to notice until too late that dissenters have a suspicious way of disappearing. McAvoy is a spindly, unappealing presence who can't hold the screen alongside of Whitaker's boisterous scenery-chewing. Much in the way Richard Attenborough's unfortunate Cry Freedom relegated South African hero Steve Biko's struggle to a problem for Kevin Kline's journalist, The Last King of Scotland leaves you with the uneasy feeling that 300,000 Ugandans were slaughtered just so this uppity white kid could learn a few life lessons. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Little Children ★★★½

Kate Winslet gives a performance of astonishing fearlessness and grace in this poignant adaptation of Belmont-based author Tom Perrotta's barbed novel of suburban malaise. Mapping out a moneyed neighborhood's playground rituals with an Edith Wharton–esque attention to propriety amongst proud parents, Little Children chronicles an unlikely erotic connection between Winslet's bumbling, frumpy, desperately unhappy housewife and Patrick Wilson's handsome, henpecked stay-at-home dad. Director Todd Field (who co-wrote the screenplay with Perotta) was mentored by the late Stanley Kubrick, and here he emulates the master's stylized, hermetically chilly, eye-of-God perspective—complete with a sardonic, third-person narration straight out of 1975's Barry Lyndon. But every time the picture begins to feel a bit too pleased with itself, these actors find a moment of truth so stark and uncomfortable, you'll be grateful for the camera's respectful distance. Former Bad News Bear Jackie Earle Haley brings both terror and pathos to the role of a sex offender paroled into a town full of raging security moms and emasculated dads, searching for a scapegoat. This overambitious movie sometimes gets a bit too big for its britches, but Winslet bravely plumbs the depths of selfishness and sadness, exposing ugly, unspoken emotions that are all too human. (Opens Oct. 20 at Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall and in the suburbs.)

Man of the Year ★★

It sounds like a foolproof premise: Robin Williams stars as the host of a popular late-night political comedy show (any resemblance to Jon Stewart or Bill Maher is entirely intentional) who's drafted in a grassroots movement to run as a third-party candidate for President of the United States. Much to the surprise and delight of his gag-writing entourage (which includes a lively Christopher Walken and the loudmouthed Daily Show correspondent Lewis Black), the blunt, trash-talking comic improbably wins the election. It's a scenario ripe for satire, but writer-director Barry Levinson has surprisingly little on his mind when it comes time to skewer the eroding line between politics and entertainment. Man of the Year almost immediately devolves into a half-baked thriller, costarring Laura Linney as a whistle-blower on the run. Nefarious computer executives behind the nation's faulty electronic voting machines are trying to snuff her out, and any chance for topical observation takes a backseat to uninspired chase sequences. Williams obviously improvised the majority of his stump speeches, and he hits about 50/50—as usual, more impressive for his speed than his accuracy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Marie Antoinette ★★½

A soundtrack blasting 1980s New Wave pop tunes is just the first of many hints that writer-director Sofia Coppola doesn't have much interest in making your standard-issue biography of France's most notorious queen. A dreamy, often very funny mood-piece from a skeptical-yet-sympathetic point of view, Coppola's overlong opus is an occasionally exhilarating rush of pageantry, elaborate fashions and oddball customs lost in translation. Kirsten Dunst's deliberately contemporary valley-girl affectations clang against the pomp and circumstance of Versailles, marking her as a stranger in a strange land. Shot in muted light with thoroughly modern handheld affectations by cinematographer Lance Acord, the filmmaking is a lot punkier and sprightlier than any Merchant/Ivory period piece. Coppola's decision to stock the cast with second-generation Hollywood royalty (including her cousin Jason Schwartzman, Danny Huston and Asia Argento) suggests she's trying to convey something deeply personal about coming of age under a privileged microscope, but life inside this bubble is a bit too narrowly conceived to hold up for the entire distended running time—especially when the Revolution comes calling in the second hour. (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

The Prestige ★★★½

"Are you watching closely?" is the question asked most often throughout this dense, fiendishly entertaining puzzle-box from Batman Begins director Christopher Nolan. You'd better be. An antidote of sorts to the cheating gimcrackery of this fall's soggy surprise hit, The Illusionist, Nolan's inordinately superior zinger tells of a lifelong, violent competition between two turn-of-the-century London magicians, strikingly well played by Christian Bale and Hugh Jackman. The film's dank, blood-flecked atmosphere is rich and gritty, while its innovative, time-tripping structural gambles pay off in enough sinister jolts to power at least three lesser pictures. Based on a novel by Christopher Priest, the screenplay (penned by the director and his brother Jonathan) digs deep into issues of duality and obsession, meticulously setting up revelations that drop like dominoes in the climactic moments. Not only is this a rare "twist-movie" that actually plays fair with the audience, but it also becomes richer and more rewarding once you've put all the pieces together. Top hats off to a droll supporting turn by Da Bowie as inventor Nikola Tesla, whose rivalry w Thomas Edison provides yet another of The Presti twisted thematic mirrors. Bravo. (At Boston Co mon, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Queen ★★★

A good deal more amusing and sympathetic th you might expect, director Stephen Frears' catty, hind-closed-doors saga of royal protocol in the w of Princess Diana's death boasts an impeccably cise performance by Helen Mirren, a model of straint and understatement. As HRM Elizabeth Mirren is the embodiment of stiff-upper-lip Bri reserve, allowing us only fleeting glimpses of inner turmoil while the monarchy is rocked by p lic outrage during that weird week of hysteri worldwide grieving. Michael Sheen does a fine as Prime Minister "Call Me Tony" Blair, attempt to usher in an era of "regular guy" modernity correctly gauging that Her Majesty's private, di fied responses will simply not cut the mustard such sad, unprecedented circumstances. Peter M gan's screenplay sneaks questions about traditi obsolescence and celebrity worship in between very funny lines, and James Cromwell steals show with an unfiltered take on Prince Philip. Queen stumbles over some unfortunate symbol involving a 14-point stag on the grounds of moral, but Mirren's sterling self-control saves e the soppiest scenes. My goodness, the things this can convey with a single eyebrow! (At Cool Corner, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Shortbus ★★★★

Although already notorious on the festival circui its no-holds-barred approach to onscreen sex sc (and yes, they are indeed as graphic and unsimul as anything you'll see in any porn flick), wr director John Cameron Mitchell's warm, wond Shortbus is hardly a scummy object of titillatio the raincoat crowd. It's instead a funny, randy, solutely delightful romantic comedy set in a York City still staggering under the long shado 9/11. Sook-Yin Lee leads a cast of brave, boldly posed newcomers, each sorting through messy tionship entanglements and converging on the a hours club from which the movie takes its title. straight, fat, skinny, old, young, ugly and beautif all are welcome, and all are embraced by the mo boundless generosity and compassion. It's no acci that the picture begins with a closeup on the St of Liberty, as Mitchell positions sexual freedom exploration as our inalienable rights. (There's a re tion of "The Star Spangled Banner" that must be to be believed.) More revolutionary than the bo ary-pushing hardcore content is Shortbus' joyful berance and empathy. The biggest organ on di here is the movie's heart. (At Kendall Square.)

ore like "The Gospel According to Yoko Ono." ais infuriatingly incomplete, rose-tinted docu- ntary purports to expose the Nixon administra- n's pernicious harassment campaign against the mer Beatle. But it's really just another layer of lish for the official version of the Lennon myth, rnished every few years by Ono and associates, to ost record sales and further canonize Saint John the only public figure of note in the entirety of 1960s. The film's selective memory dubiously its "Revolution" as the first pop protest song, lfully ignoring the dozens of other artists who re taking their own stands long before Lennon. also won't hear the words "Paul McCartney" or eorge Harrison" mentioned once in this entire vie, and you'd have to be crazy to think they'd ng up the wife and child John abandoned to run with Yoko. Directors David Leaf and John Sche- ld fashion this collage of fun archival footage terrific songs into a VH-1 friendly format, but ir blinkered choices blow Lennon's prankish, rtfelt anti-war protests all out of proportion, ng a disservice to others in the movement. Timeless Tracks

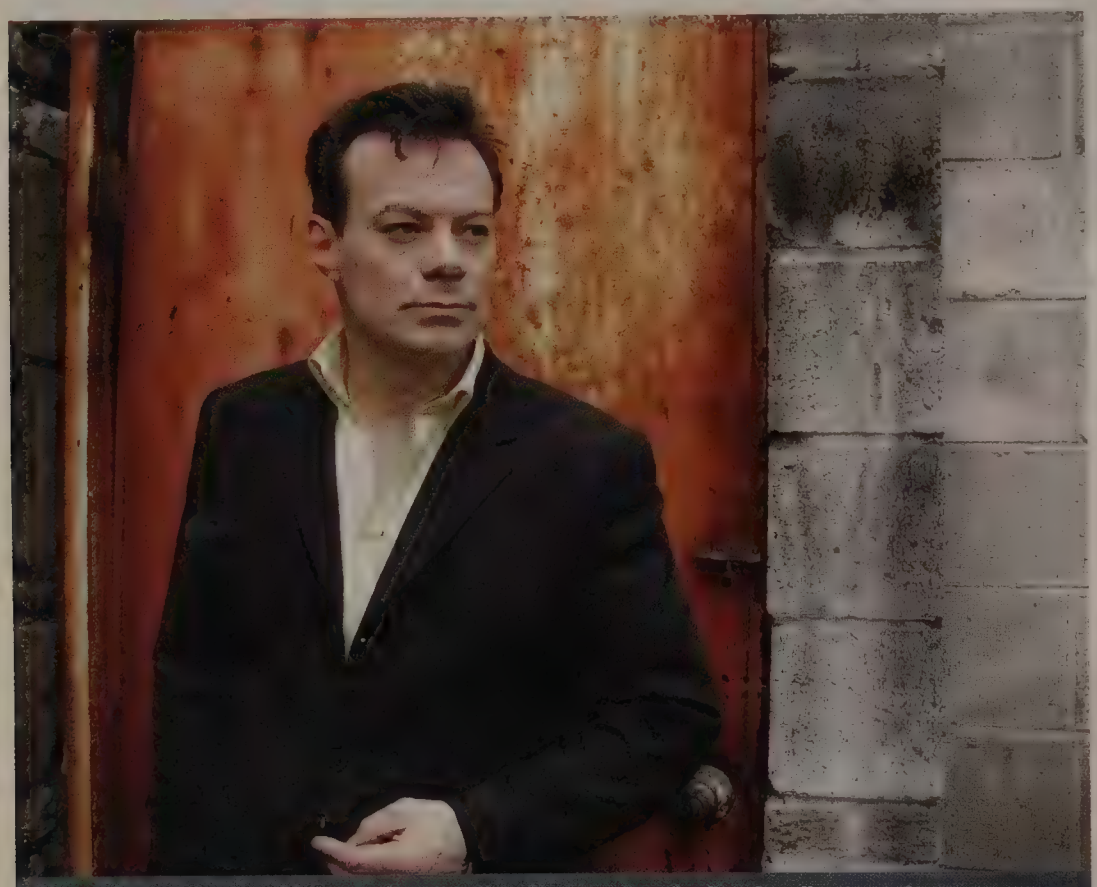
BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

James Hunter is a journeyman to the core of his soul—the kind of sweet soul music associated with Sam Cooke and Ray Charles in the early '60s. For 20 years, Hunter has plied his own vintage-sounding R&B on the European club circuit, primarily in his native England—with limited success.



Hunter's singular sound is born of respect for the classics and a firm handle on modern grooves.

He caught one break when Van Morrison sang on Hunter's 1996 debut and invited him on tour as a backup singer, calling Hunter "one of the best voices, and best-kept secrets, in British R&B and soul."

This year, however, has marked a new journey—with fresh returns—for Hunter. He released his first American record, People Gonna Talk, to rave reviews, and hit the road with relentless zeal. By the end of a fall tour that stops Nov. 21 at the Iron Horse in Northampton, Nov. 22 at the Paradise Rock Club and Nov. 24 at the Music Hall in Portsmouth, N.H., Hunter will have logged nearly 9,000 miles across North America in support of the record.

"I kind of regard it all as one trip since January," the singer-guitarist says from his bus en route to New Orleans from Atlanta, where he opened for Etta James (as he did in Boston this past June). "I've given Route 66—or whatever it is they call it these days—a hammering.

"I've been in the music business for about 20 years without having learned much about it, but apparently this is the way forward: You tour a lot," says the 44-year-old Hunter, who reunited with Morrison at a recent show on Long Island, joining him onstage to blow harmonica on a Sonny Boy Williamson tune. "I prefer working to not working."

Music certainly beats working on the railway tracks as a "signal technician" in his hometown of Colchester, about an hour outside of London, through much of the '80s. "It wasn't what I was good at, to be honest—I'm surprised I got away with it for seven years," Hunter says. "We installed signaling equipment and stuff like that. I had a little trio that I'd play in on weekends, and then I met some musicians up in London and moved there."

His first combo of note, the wryly named Howlin' Wilf & the Vee-Jays, didn't set the world on fire, but Hunter began to tap his passion for music from the '50s and early '60s. Among his favorites were the "5" Royales, a gospel-rooted group from North Carolina whose fiery guitarist, Lowman Pauling, was an influence on Hunter's playing.

"I suppose I've always been a little bit out of time," Hunter says of his taste for classic sounds, developed when his grandmother gave him a gramophone and a stack of 78s. "I listened to a lot of Jackie Wilson and the '5' Royales, stuff with those kinds of grooves in it, and early James Brown. There was a bit of a reissue scene in Europe and England. That kicked off my interest in black American music, really."

As for Sam Cooke, the singer to whom he is most often compared, Hunter says, "I listened to him a lot, so some of it may come out, and it might be the way that I've written the songs. They come out a bit the same way melodically."

Indeed, while People Gonna Talk sports 14 smart, slithery originals inflected with a touch of ska, even his danceable numbers tend to convey a romantic charm, both lyrically and melodically. "You can't have too much of that," says the singer, whose touring group supplements his brittle, edgy guitar licks with keyboards, drums, standup bass and horns.

"I've gotten away from calling it retro, but I can't be in complete denial," Hunter says of his brand of soul. "It's an old way of doing new stuff. It isn't meant to be a dive into the past. That's just how it comes out."

In any case, Hunter made People Gonna Talk at Toe Rag Studios, a small London studio revered by garage-rock purists (and the White Stripes, who recorded their 2002 landmark, Elephant, there) for its '60s-era equipment and old-fashioned recording techniques.

"We basically re-created onstage conditions in the studio," he says. "We just played it as if we were doing a gig. There was a time where everybody did it like that. We didn't know any better."

Hunter has begun writing new songs. But for someone with the brass ring finally within reach, any talk of hopes for his next record is met with the virtual shrug of someone on a long road. "It'll take care of itself," he says. "There's no sort of game plan. I just drift along with it." iB plays Nov. 22 at the Paradise Rock Club.

IMPROPER sightings

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.

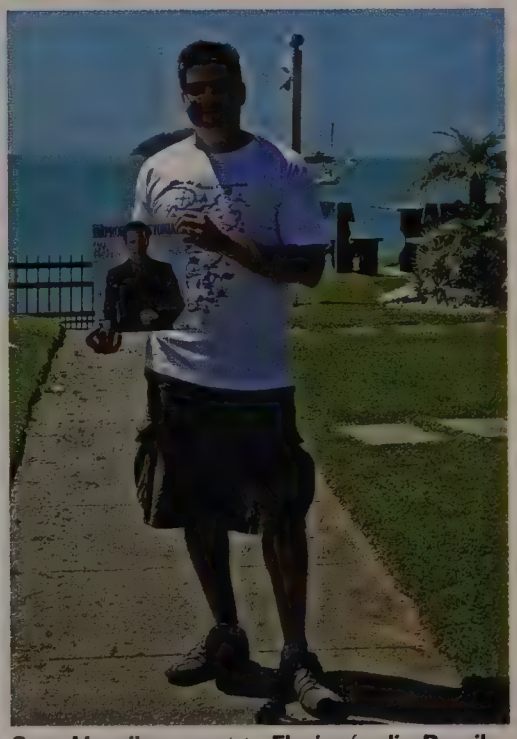
Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Alda Kalberer brought us on a trip to Paris, where she posed in front of this rather awkward-looking tower that we assume must have some sort of cultural significance.

The Southern Ocean (Lauren Karpstein), Justin Ciktor, Jim McDevitt, Kristin Heineman and the Indian Ocean (Jessica Schoenfeld) all visited Cape Leeuwin, Australia.

Phyliss Bernstein traveled with Mitch and Holly Blaustein to the Great Wall of China, which is surprisingly made of brick—not china.

Trey Grayson, the secretary of state of Kentucky, wonders if his state's capital is pronounced Loo-ee-ville or Loo-uh-ville. Hey, Trey… it's Frankfort.



Sean Hourihan went to Florianópolis, Brazil, which we'd describe as the best of both Florida and Indianapolis. Well, at least in name.

Sean Dolan stopped for this shot with Ahmad, a gem dealer in Kabul, Afghanistan. We don't know if it's the IMPROPER, the struggling gem business or the long-sleeved shirt in 100-degree heat, but Ahmad: Lighten up, man.

ook Who's Stalking

o my soul mate: I'm sure you know ho I am. We passed each other verywhere last year: walking down he streets of Northeastern, working ut at the gym, grabbing a cup of offee. I saw your face. At first I hought nothing of it. It's hard not to otice a tall, handsome blond. But as ime went on, I knew it couldn't be ust a coincidence. Recently, we met. It as very brief, but there was an nstant attraction. I would say that I ope to see you again. But I don't hink I need to, because I probably ill. Hoping...

Vet Ones

o the fair woman by the reflecting ool at the Christian Science Center, n Saturday, Oct. 21. You were sitting here dressed in green. You wore the eason well and I couldn't help but are as you washed your hands in the ater. I go to the reflecting pool often nd have never seen anyone besides yself actually touch the water. I ould tell that you appreciated the eauty of the pool's shimmer and anted to see if the water was real. Ve made a joke about the fall breezes eing chilly. Your smile was electric. ve often gone back to the reflecting ool often, hoping to see you there dmiring your reflection. But you eren't there. If you read this, don't esitate to say hello next time we both nd ourselves by the most beautiful ot in Boston.

entenced to Bad etters o anyone who reads this: Hey, my ame is Catfish and I wanted to ask hy people take guys who are carcerated as bad? And why can't ey talk to them while they're cked up? I read the IMPROPER every sue and some of the letters I read re really stupid and don't make sense. If you have a solution get at me...

Jailbirds Are People Too

Dear Devoutly Disgusted: I'm sure you've been eagerly awaiting our response. I'm glad to see that you took the time out of your busy schedule to criticize my cousin's and my ad. For your information, we have received many types of responses that had higher standards and more class than yours. As far as we're concerned, you're lonely and childish. And your response disgusted me and my fellow inmates. Just to let you know, you did nothing but make us laugh. Last but not least, we jailbirds, including my cousin and I, have feelings and opinions too. Put that in your pipe and smoke it.

Yours truly,

Big Guns

Happy birthday to Sergeant Dick Steele and the USMC. You're our favorite badass. Semper Fi, baby.

Whor-ror Costumes

Girls, girls, girls. I'm not sure why you never received the memo, but slutty Halloween costumes are out. It's a cliché now, and as much as you think the guys are oohing and ahhing (which they may be—boys will be boys), they're also laughing at you behind your back. The slutty devil, the slutty witch, the slutty cowgirl, the slutty superhero, and yes, the slutty Raggedy Ann I actually saw this year are just too much. Some of you, while you look fantastic I must say, need to cover up, and wearing close to nothing is not validating your sexiness. To the others, the ones with cellulite hanging out of their brassiere and boy short underwear, sapre us, for the love of God. It's enough to make anyone, male or female nauseous. Walking around BU this year on the Saturday before Halloween made me feel sorry for all of you thinking this holiday gives you the right to tromp around in slutty lingerie and that other people actually want to see it.

—Scarred

Ode de Toilette

To the smelly man on the train:
I wanted to let you know
That you smell really bad
You smell just like B.O.
I think you need a shower
Or maybe a little cologne
'Cause that smell is really getting to me
It won't leave me alone
So next time you decide to take the T
Make sure you have soap in stock
'Cause if you don't I'm making sure Your ass is going to walk.

Hold the Crab

To the old witch at Pizzeria Regina in the North End: I've ordered a large cheese pizza two times a week for the past six months. Humor me just once and pretend to recognize me.

—A Regular

Snippety When Wet

Why is it that at the busiest points of the business day, takeout establishments are cleaning their floors? My heels are dangerous enough avoiding the cobblestones and grates on the streets of Boston. Why should I have to worry about falling down when going for lunch? Businesses should be more aware of their slippery floors during the hustle and bustle of the lunch hour. Can't they wait until after the rush is over to wash up the floor's mess? It doesn't make sense to me, and I see it over and over. I'm not looking to go on a slip and slide during my break.

NOVEMBER 8–21, 2006

SCORPIO OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

ou're golden. There may have been other times when you shone like the sun in all its glory, ut that hasn't happened for a while. It doesn't matter how you handle the opportunities ffered, the amenities extended or the praise you're showered with while so many planets are raveling through Scorpio; try not to take anything for granted. True, lucky Jupiter has been in our sign for the past year, but it's on its way out, as is magnetic Venus. And while your Mars oruler is with you for the first time in two years, it too doesn't stay for long. Carpe diem.

SAGITTARIUS

lumb the depths of your unconscious. Undergo hypnosis. onsult an oracle. Just make sure you know what it is you uly want, or more to the point, need. Cover all the bases, o you won't mismanage the fabulous stroke of good luck eading your way when Venus, the Lesser Fortuna, merges s beneficent rays with those of your Jupiter ruler (aka the reater Fortuna) on Nov. 15. It sounds like a Tarot reading in your future. You'd think, with all the talk about agittarius being the sign of the Seer, you wouldn't need utside help. It ain't necessarily so.

CAPRICORN

ECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

ke the Lion, the Goat appears to be standing the test of me. Some people call the tests "problems." Others (your ore irritating acquaintances, perhaps) refer to them as pportunities." No matter how you deal with what actually mes your way, understand that value-conscious Venus' uare to your Saturn ruler and a square from the Scorpio n later this month are normal, seasonal challenges. A ball thrown—you might hit it, miss it or let it go by. This me the balls represent other people's money and your sex e. Interesting, no?

AQUARIUS

ANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

eling reckless? How about more adventurous than usual? at's because courageous Mars is sending strong supportive es to your Uranus ruler. Mercury follows suit by extending warm invitation around Veteran's Day. Think long and rd before you sign up for any passing thing. Just before e Thanksgiving exodus begins, unpredictable Uranus will ange direction, from retrograde to direct—a mere two ys after Mercury also flips. Chances are you'll change your nd a few times. Try to stay flexible.

PISCES

EBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

ese are the times that try men's souls. Maybe. Some Fish uld be under undue stress, trying to adjust to a new rspective now that your Neptune ruler is moving forward. ess what? Another adjustment is in the wind. Oddly ractive, altruistic Uranus in your sign turns direct on v. 19, after a five-month (since mid-June) hiatus. Then ere's little Mercury making its usual retrograde mess. cus instead on the benefits (material, psychological and otional) beamed by the doubly fortunate Venus-Jupiter njunction in empathetic Scorpio.

ARIES

ARCH 20–APRIL 19

w much does money matter? Right now, a whole lot. With much activity in your Scorpio house of investments, urance and inheritances, plus arrangements involving er people's money, you'd better proceed with the utmost ution. At the moment, your tendency to come off as predictable, overconfident and caustic might not sit well h folks who have a vested interest in your profit and loss tement. Since Mercury is retrograde until Nov. 17 in that tion of your chart, errors and oversights will be made.

TAURUS

PRIL 20–MAY 20

're just as likely to fall for an elaborate scam or believe the est spin as you are to reject them. It all depends on what u find out when the sun and retrograde Mercury convene in your Scorpio house of significant others. Since your Venus ruler has a significant stake in that meeting, there's a good chance you'll become overly emotional about the information. Be careful. It's one thing to be merely misinformed, and another to have your hopes dashed. A saving grace: prudent Saturn's hold on your imagination and ambition.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

As wave after wave of gossip and innuendo seeps into your workplace, your coworkers may flounder in a stormy sea of suspicion. Because it is your retrograde Mercury ruler spreading the word, the Twins are better equipped than most to distinguish the facts from the fabrications. Nevertheless, it makes sense to wait until Mercury turns direct before you take any action that might endanger your position. It's also a good idea to try to stem the tide of paranoia. But since acidic Mars joins Mercury this week, it may be hard to remain sweet and gentle.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

Are you singing "Happy Days Are Here Again?" Or did you campaign so diligently for a proposition on Election Day that you need a vacation? Maybe you're the kind of Moon Child who, like Nero, is compelled to play while your district goes down in flames. No matter. Basically, it's all good. Whatever happens will happen in Scorpio—the water sign hell-bent on strengthening its ties to you. Because the romantic implications are also favorable, make the most of this moment in time before it eludes you.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Another of those signals that seem to come from out of the blue whenever your sun ruler and Mercury get together could arrive Nov. 8. Pay attention to the messages (as well as the vibes you pick up), especially if they concern your family, your residence or the real estate market in general. Should a restriction be placed on you while Saturn in your sign is besieged by all those planets in Scorpio, try to stay relaxed. A proud Lion has plenty of backbone; you don't need to stiffen up.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

In the midst of this week's Mercury retrograde, there's the election and its aftermath. The last time this situation occurred (November 2000), Mercury was changing direction and Florida was hanging by a thread (i.e. Hurricane Chad). However, because the Messenger is your ruling planet, you could be the target for the arrows that Mercury is shooting all over the place: a conjunction with loving Venus; another one with the creatively suspicious Scorpio sun; and yet another belly-to-belly encounter with abrasive and sexually adventurous Mars. Take pains not to get hurt.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

Let's concentrate on how fine your fine romance is—or is your Venus ruler's trip through your house of acquisitions and values mainly interested in finery? Scorpio can be an intriguing yet problematic time for the Scales, because you probably have a few natal planets in that deep, dark, hard-to-explain water sign. For a verbal Libra, whose ability to convey intelligence and refinement is beyond dispute, these churning emotions can be difficult to deal with, let alone express. Luckily, Venus teams up with Mercury to find the words. Write.

a personalized Transit Forecast (30 to 40+ pages) detailing the major themes and issues that will arise over the next 12 months, send e, date, time and place of birth, plus a check or money order for $42.50 per report to ROCKIE GARDINER, 6701 Colbath Ave., Valley n, CA 91405; more details at www.rockiehoroscope.com. ONE SMALL STEP FOR A SOCIALITE, ONE GIANT LEAP FOR THE ESPLANADE...

It was a marvelous night for a Moondance, with the stars up above in your eyes, a fantabulous night to make romance, 'neath the cover of September skies... OK, enough already.

Suffice it to say that Moondance, a benefit for the Esplanade Association, was a party of epic proportions. Held beneath a big white tent overlooking the Charles River, the dress code was diamonds and denim—a welcome reprieve from black tie—which guests interpreted in ways ranging from the highly stylish (a denim gown by Escada) to the positively Bostonian (ignoring the dress code altogether and opting, instead, for tweed and gray flannels).

A makeup artist was on hand to decorate guests' faces with Swarovski crystals, and a photographer was there to snap glamour shots against a delightfully cheesy backdrop. The raffle prize was a diamond necklace, and the food was pure genius, as was the wine bar where, for a donation, guests could buy an exquisite vintage to drink with their dinner (not that they were pouring plonk otherwise). The celebrity auction, meanwhile, included such items as lunch with Walter Cronkite, a James Taylor VIP concert package and marathon coaching from Uta Pippig. In short, it was the kind of party that people talk about for years afterward.

Present and accounted for was pretty much everyone on Boston's social radar, among them: gorgeous organizer Jeryl Oristaglio and her husband, Steve, the stunning blonde pair of Peggy Henry (sans husband John, who was out of town) and investment guru Cyndi Humphrey (sporting her whopping World Series ring), Chestnut Hillians Kasey Kaufman and Michael Horowitz, art dealer Abi Goodman and her handsome other half, Mark, the superstylish Maura Connolly and John Egan, überphilanthropists Matthew and Lori Sidman, Jonathan and Maggie Seelig, and Rachael and Andy Goldfarb, jewelry designer Maud Cabot and the devilishly handsome Andrew, eminent MGH doc Kirk Wood and the swanlike Glynis Gozigian, Back Bay party pair Shelly and Ofer Nemirovsky, and the lovely Mary Baranski with her husband, Mark, who, upon winning the dance contest, said, "I might be a middle-aged white guy, but I still got some moves."

Van Morrison would've undoubtedly approved.

IF THE NATIONAL ENQUIRER ONLY KNEW...

If it had been Battle of the Network Stars, it would've been tough to say who won: Mad TV's Josh Meyers for doing the worm on the dance floor, Baywatch hunk David Chokachi for getting on stage with the band and proving that singing's not his strong suit, soap opera diva Victoria Rowell for getting everyone all choked up with her speech about foster care, or Grammy-nominated crooner John Ford Coley for reminding everyone of the lyrics to his '70s hits, like "I'd Really Love to See You Tonight."

In any case, the annual dinner dance to benefit the Federation for Children With Special Needs and Parents for Residential Reform (which helps kids in foster care) was held at the Park Plaza and attracted the aforementioned celebrities, along with such local notables as emcees J.J. Wright and Paula Street from 103.3 FM, car czar Ernie Boch Jr., PR powerhouse George Regan, actor Robert Wahlberg and the delectable Gina, former mayors Kevin White and Ray Flynn, nightclub moguls Russell Robbat and Paul Barclay, toothsome blonde Nancy Eckersley, comedienne/stylist Patrice Vinci (who did an outstanding impression of Tina Turner dancing in her supercute minidress), and one woman who pleaded, "Please don't let me bid on anything in the silent auction. Last year, I had three glasses of wine and wound up with a Gucci purse and a Bose wave radio."

By the end of the evening, things got so wild that one of the celebrity guests was chugging wine directly out of the bottle, while another was trying to organize a crew to go out clubbing, and the band kept reluctantly agreeing to play one more song, all of which goes to show that your mother was wrong when she said nothing good ever happens after midnight.

I GUESS "BITE ME" AND "EAT ME" WERE TAKEN...

Children with trust funds don't exactly make our hearts bleed, but the Children's Trust Fund is an entirely different story.

The charity, which aims to prevent and treat child abuse, held its 16th annual gala at the Westin Copley Plaza, and among the worthies on hand were former governor and first lady Paul and Jan Cellucci, Stephen Tocco (the evening's honoree), yachty party pair Steve and Lisa Woolfson (who donated a day on their 53-foot classic wooden sailboat to the auction), advertising giant Ed Eskandarian, real estate mogul Arthur Winn with the supergorgeous Alicia Foley, the soignée Amie Guerra, stunning model Aileen Benson with the equally toothsome Marie Caggiano and Jennie Longhurst, supergroovers David Martin, Julie Wernau, Mark Relyea and Karen Martin, überhipsters Peter Wernau, Thi Linh, Rob Kramer and Stephanie Walker, and one person who whispered, "That must be Donald Trump's next wife," when a video presentation began with the sound of a baby crying.

However, the evening's funniest comment came during the auction, when the opportunity to create and name a J.P. Licks ice cream flavor was being auctioned off.

"That's easy," said one guest. "I'd name it 'Lick Me.'" IB

BY USING PESTICIDES

BUT WE'RE NOT BITTER

Sauza

TRES GENERACIONES

PERSEVERANCIA · PASIÓN · TRADICIÓN · 1873

The beautiful blue agave grows naturally in the Jalisco region of Mexico around the town of Tequila.

That's the way we like it. So that's the way we leave it. Natural. Because that way, our tequila tastes of… well… agave. Pure and simple.

It doesn't taste of pesticides. It doesn't taste of herbicides. And it doesn't have the bitterness that comes from some cheaper production processes, either.

What all this means is that, like all our tequila, Sauza® Tres Generaciones® doesn't require the flavour enhancers that others have to add to mask less pleasant tastes.

Sauza® Tres Generaciones® tastes like tequila should taste. We know you'll enjoy it. That's why you won't find a trace of bitterness.

HOLIDAY CHEER

Black Friday and the holiday shopping season it heralds are upon us, but don't panic. In this issue we've got a few resources designed to take the stress out of seasonal consumerism.

First, we assigned writer Marni Katz the task of scouring the city for gifts guaranteed to score you big points with pals and partners. Check out our list of 16 finds—from the toy every boy is coveting this year to baubles she'll want to show off.

Boston's shopping options have never been wider, and one area that's booming with unusual boutiques is the South End. Writer Wyndham Lewis takes you on a tour of a few of its gems. Even better, with so many great restaurants and bars nearby, a mid- or post-shopping cocktail is within easy reach.

Which brings us to Jolyon Helterman's review of the city's tastiest hot drinks. No, not the kind you get at the skating rink or the coffee shop, but the good kind, dosed with a little of that holiday spirit.

CULINARY CORRECTION

My compliments to Carolyn Faye Fox on her article "Look Back in Hunger" (Sept. 27). I was honored to be given credit for the part I played in the many changes that have happened to the dining scene in Boston over the past three decades. I was quoted as saying that back in the '70s, when I started my career, "chefs were drunks, on the fringes of society." What I was talking about was the public's perception of chefs in the context of today, which is much more glamorous. I didn't mean to state it as a fact. Therefore, I must apologize to my generation of chefs (50 years plus), many of whom set the standard for professionalism in our industry. We all know that a certain amount of drinking goes along with our profession, but in no way did I mean to indict my own comrades.

SOUR ON SOROFF

Gee, I wonder if Jonathan Soroff has a subscription to Vanity Fair. His "Soroff/On" interviews read like pussy versions of George Wayne's, and his "Last Scene Here" columns are dime-store versions of Dominick Dunne's "Diary." He should really hang it up and leave it to the professionals.

BAD AD

This ad is breaking every rule in advertising. The type is plain and too small. And there is too much of it. There is very little color. It's visually unappealing too. It's poorly designed and written and there are many grammatical and spelling errors. But because your nut job of a boss is making you crazy, you'd rather stand on the sidewalk and read this silly little ad just to do something mindless for a few minutes. Are you ready for our pitch? Imagine if you lived in one of the new Depot Square Residences in Beverly's wonderful Arts District. Your life would be so much better. You'd be steps from the Beverly train station. You wouldn't even need a car (but there's plenty of off street and garage parking included at Depot Square). You could just hop on the train and wouldn't have any more of those nasty road rage episodes battling the traffic. You'd have more time in the morning for over priced expressos. On the weekends you could walk to fancy art galleries, trendy restaurants and exotic martini bars. Not to mention that you'd be close to beautiful beaches, grassy parks, educational museums, renowned theatres and cute little boutiques. So go back to work, turn down the sound on your computer and go to DepotSquareBeverly.com. And get the details about our Grand Opening Bash on December 7th. After that go into your boss's office and tell her (or him) you are moving. While you are in her office, ask for a raise. But you won't need one because a residence with parking starts in the low $200's. Fixed rates are available for qualified buyers. But what the heck...a raise wouldn't hurt. After all, you have to deal with that nut job who doesn't do a thing all day.

Roasted chicken with herb butter, wilted escarole and tater tots

Raising the Bar

Burgers, pizza, meatballs, tater tots… on the face of it, chef Will Gilson kept his promise to his new employers for a menu firmly rooted in bar-grub territory. The owners of the Cellar, the popular two-floor dive bar near Harvard Square, were understandably concerned about letting anything disturb the laid-back vibe that had been humming along steadily for 16 years. Who better than a regular to keep things in check? "I was downstairs drinking a beer, and they approach me, saying they wanted someone to take over the food," recalls Gilson. "I played along. I was like, 'Yeah, sure.' Then we go upstairs and they show me the pristine kitchen. It was an offer I couldn't refuse."

The dishes that emerge from his kitchen are no ordinary bar snacks. The pizza—that is, the grilled flatbread—is topped with fine-tuned combos like roasted mushrooms with thyme, ricotta and sweet garlic. The meatballs ($9) are "autumn-spiced" and come with tomato-pumpkin confit rather than run-of-the-mill marinara. Even the tater tots ($5) are made from scratch. Then again, Gilson is no ordinary regular. Now 24, the chef made food-news headlines at the ripe old age of 16 when he began creating menus two nights a week at his father's farm, the Herb Lyceum, in Groton. Since then, he's spent a few years honing his craft at Ana Sortun's upscale Turkish eatery, Oleana. Oh… and just last year he up and got himself a culinary degree.

Traces of Sortun's Mediterranean palette pepper Gilson's menu, from the warmed olives with herbs, citrus and spices ($4) to the harissa (a salsa-like condiment) accompanying the chicken-and-thyme croquettes ($8). But the more pervasive influence may be the years spent on the family herb farm learning to fashion four-star meals from nothing but locally grown meats and produce. And naturally, there are lots and lots of herbs, from his dad's place or from any number of potted plants lining the walls and banisters of the tiny, 12-table "dining room" reserved for hungry Cellar patrons who venture upstairs. Almost every dish prominently features a fresh herb, including the potage of parsnips with black truffles and thyme ($8), the crispy wild salmon filet with tarragon emulsion ($17) and the hanger steak with rosemary-truffle fries ($20).

Wait a sec: Herb plantings? Tarragon emulsion? Truffled parsnip potage? "Well, the biggest thing was not to change anything about the bar *down*stairs," Gilson laughs, nodding to a waiter headed down below with four more orders of tater tots. "There's no point where the quality of the food is going to be less than what it should've been—you still have to put your name on it." And from the ravenous looks on the faces of the regular crowd, both upstairs and down, this "bar food" isn't disturbing the vibe in the least. Garden at the Cellar, 991 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-876-2580. —JH

INNER VIEW

A Very Brady Bio

Boston-based writer Charles P. Pierce has covered local and national sports for numerous publications. His recent book, Moving the Chains: Tom Brady and the Pursuit of Everything, explores the NFL star's unlikely rise to greatness. Pierce discusses the book Dec. 4 at Harvard Book Store.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: If Tom Brady never picked up another football, where do you think he'd rank among Boston's greatest athletes of all time?

Charlie Pierce: I think he's at the very top of the second tier. I feel like Ted Williams and Bobby Orr were the two most deeply felt athletes in Boston history, and the others like Bird, Russell and Brady, are just slightly below them.

IB: Any difficulties writing a biography about someone who hasn't even hit 30 yet?

CP: Well, without having hit 30, he's certainly accomplished a lot. The book is really more a story on the state of a career than a biography. It's about a career that was built almost overnight and how Tom has coped with it.

IB: Anything you learned that took you by surprise?

CP: He's extraordinarily curious. Lorne Michaels told me that when Brady hosted Saturday Night Live, he haunted the writers' meetings, wanting to know everything about it: why a sketch was cut, why one sketch came before another.… He completely involves himself with everything.

IB: If you were were writing a chapter about the current Patriots season, what would it be called?

CP: "Extended Introduction." There are just so many new people, including a young star running back and a bunch of new wide receivers.

IB: How much do you think Brady's been affected by the way Deion Branch's controversial departure played out?

CP: I don't think it shook him as bad as it did when they let Lawyer Milloy go, but I do think it angered him and—this is my own opinion—made him question why he left all that money on the table during negotiations.

IB: Let's set the over/under on career Super Bowl titles at four: Which are you taking?

CP: I'm going to take the over, and at the very least, I think he'll get one more.

IB: Let's hope so.

Ashtanga, Vinyasa and Hatha, Oh My... With yoga fever showing no signs of cooling, the Sports Club L.A. has just unveiled its swank new, 9,000-square foot mind/body studios, creating a buzz among the limber set. Occupying an entire floor of the club complex, the new facility includes two large, bamboo-floored, naturally lit yoga studios, one of which boasts a 50-foot-tall wall of windows looking out over Washington Street. A Pilates/Gyrotonics room outfitted with state-of-the-art sculpting equipment (reformers, cadillacs and pulley towers) and three smaller rooms for private lessons complete the facilities. Along with the upgrade, the club has expanded its mind/body classes to a staggering 60 a week and is primed for visits from nationally known yoga teachers, says group exercise manager Marc MacDonald. Place palms together, bow, say, "Namaste." 4 Avery St., Boston (617-375-8200).

Wash, Sit, Repeat... As if we needed another reminder that cleanliness is next to dog-liness, Boston-based Aj Baci has rolled out a line of chichi haircare/furcare products meant for use by dogs and humans alike. With rose-hip shampoos, protein-loaded conditioners, shine protectors with sunscreen and paw wax for protection on ice, salt and gravel, it's enough to make anyone who buys run-of-the-mill drugstore products growl with envy. These shampoos for two make washing your furry friend in the shower that much easier, says the company. Our advice? Keep bathtime with Fido on the down low. www.ajbaci.com.

Ritz Calls It Quits... Boston's iconic Ritz-Carlton has been sold. Plans call for a Jan. 11 transition to Taj Hotels, which runs more than 75 hotels and resorts around the world—though the Taj Boston will be only the company's second U.S. hotel. What big changes are in store? Um... nothing, really. Only the name. No room renovations, no personnel "restructuring," not even a restaurant overhaul. If nothing else, they've got their finger on the pulse of Bostonian culture, where change is a hard sell. 15 Arlington St., Boston (877-482-5267).

The Suite Life... The lines, the trashy outfits, the kid who look half your age—there comes a time in ever club queen's life when the scene starts to seem mor drab than fab. But before you hang up your dancin shoes for good, perhaps a simple change of venue is i order. Suite, a new "club boutique" at 1 Boylston Place touts a more intimate, classier vibe with slightly older crowd. Fridays feature DJ San spinning Euro House, Hip-Hop, Rock and '80 remixes. Saturdays bring a mix of Latin Hous and International. But call for reservations there's no waiting in line at this door. 1 Boylst Place, Boston (617-827-1500); table reserv tions, (617-512-5311). www.suiteboston.com.

Two Guests Walk Into a Bar... When deve opers announced plans to turn Boston's Charl Street Jail into a $120 million luxury hotel an promised guests a "captivating" experience, w chuckled heartily. But now that they've chos the hotel's name, it's clear they were in on th joke. The Liberty Hotel opens next summe 215 Charles St., Boston. www.libertyhotel.com.

BEAUTY BUZZ

Dark Matter

Next time you flip through a celebrity magazine, peer closely at Katie Holmes' fingertips. And Lindsa Lohan's. And Jessica Alba's. No longer pretty in pink, these PYTs have taken a dip into the dark side, wi fingernails short and square, painted shiny black. Chanel's Black Satin, black nail lacquer with a hint metallic shimmer, is this season's go-to color. Saks can't keep Black Satin in stock and neither c Neiman's. MAC is sold out of their black satin polish, Nocturnelle. So we scavenge Sephora, but fi nothing. Not ready to give up, we inquire in vain at Beauty & Main. G Spa tells us that black is an oft-r quested color for manicures, but they're all out right now. Grey is the next best thing. At C.O. Bigelo we turn up some too-shimmery silvers. What's a girl to do? At Barneys we finally settle on Shu Uemu ME884—a medium grey frost with subtle pink undertones. You'd probably like it, but you'll have to to Shu for it; we bought the last bottle at Barneys. Or you can head to MAC to pick up a bottle of Nigh fall, their version of the elusive black frost. MAC Cosmetics, 112 Newbury St., Boston (617-267-0013); S Uemura, 130 Newbury St., Boston (617-247-3500). —Marni Elyse Katz

Steep Thoughts

Make like the Brits and warm up with one of the city's oh-so-civilized afternoon teas.

The Bristol at the Four Seasons
Daily, 3–4:30 pm; $26–$32
200 Boylston St., Boston (617-338-4400)
www.fourseasons.com/boston
Choose between the traditional Four Seasons Tea and the Royal Tea, the latter of which includes a Kir Royal. Both are served with a pot of brewed tea, scones, tea sandwiches and pastries, and accompanied by strawberry jam, lemon curd and Devonshire cream.

Fantasy Tea Party at L'Espalier
Sat., 2–3 pm; $27–$55
30 Gloucester St., Boston (617-262-3023)
www.lespalier.com
L'Espalier's fantasy tea parties include selections inspired by fairy tales: "Red Riding Hood's Basket" offers petits-fours, pastries, tea sandwiches and canapés, while the "Golden Goose" features caviar and champagne.

Holiday Tea at the Boston Harbor Hotel
Daily through Jan. 9, 2:30–4:30 pm; $32.50
70 Rowes Wharf, Boston (617-856-7744)
www.bhh.com
Enjoy sparkling wine, fresh strawberries with Devonshire cream, tea sandwiches and holiday cookies, all with the hotel's trademark views over Boston Harbor.

Holiday Tea at the Park Plaza Hotel & Towers Swan Cafe
Daily throughout December, 3–5 pm; $16.50–$29.50
64 Arlington St., Boston (617-654-1906)
www.bostonparkplaza.com
The Park Plaza's holiday tea includes a formal three-course service, with specialty teas, fresh gingerbread and champagne. Kids get the nonalcoholic "teanog"—traditional eggnog enhanced with tea—and a selection of holiday cookies.

The Ritz-Carlton Lounge
Wed.–Sun., 2–4 pm; $16–$40
15 Arlington St., Boston (617-536-5700)
www.ritzcarlton.com/hotels/boston
The Ritz serves a proper British-style afternoon tea, featuring champagne, to the soothing music of a harpist. For kids, "The Trumpet of the Swan" includes PB&J's, cookies and a pot of either hot cocoa or tea.

UpStairs on the Square
Daily, 3–5 pm (last seating at 4:30 pm); $16–$22
91 Winthrop St., Cambridge (617-864-1933)
www.upstairsonthesquare.com
Upstairs on the Square offers a daily assortment of traditional tea services, generally comprising three-tiered courses with tea sandwiches, sweets and, natch, a pot of tea.

Cocoa Chanel?

Putting the "Gorge" in Gorgeous... Chocolate and fashion top the interest lists of many a woman of taste. With Choco Choco House, her new store in the South End, owner Aliya Wali manages to appeal to both obsessions. Recently opened on Pembroke Street, the tiny boutique sells designer chocolates modeled after fashion accessories—miniature chocolate handbags filled with creamy ganache and chocolate shoes topped with pink sugar. Can't bring yourself to dine on designer duds? There's also a case full of truffles with inventive fillings, like the Ying Yang (milk chocolate and Chinese spices), the Mayan (chili spices) and a dark chocolate truffle loaded with goat cheese. 83 Pembroke St., Boston (617-718-0946), www.chocochocohouse.com.

Satellite Dish... Her Newbury Street restaurant is a smashing success (just try to get a table at Stephanie's on a weekend without a reservation), and now chef Stephanie Sokolove is taking that magic to TV. Her new cooking show, Sophisticated Comfort Food Made Simple, on the America One Network, airs Mondays at 11:30 am and features step-by-step instructions for creating favorites from the restaurant—like meatloaf, mac 'n' cheese and lobster quesadillas.

Sweet Dreams... Back in the '70s, Ben Lem developed a love for desserts while working in his father's old Newbury Street restaurant the English Room. In early November, the former retail banker realized a personal dream by opening his own dessert café, Sweet Christopher's, on Centre Street in Jamaica Plain. The small café—named after Lem's 6-year-old son—seats up to 16 diners and boasts an extensive takeout menu featuring all sorts of cakes—including cheesecake, carrot cake and chocolate cake, available by the slice for $6 or less—as well as truffles, chocolates and a selection of espresso drinks. 601 Centre St., Jamaica Plain (617-522-1277). Tue.–Sun. 11:30 am-9:30 pm.

Hot Pot Hot Spot... Tired of a packed dining room and long lines scaring away customers, the folks at Pho Pasteur on Washington Street have expanded their Chinatown presence with a second location just around the corner, in the Beach Street space formerly occupied by the vegetarian eatery Happy Buddha. The new spot—succinctly called Pasteur—offers essentially the same authentic Vietnamese menu as its sibling, with one major addition: Vietnamese hot pot, a style of preparation that lets diners cook their own meat, seafood and vegetables right at the table. 5 Beach St., Boston (617-482-7647). —RL

OUCH, THAT'S OLD

If I'm getting called out for being ancient when I'm 29, I sure can't wait till I'm 30.

About once a year, I stop by BU to talk to a journalism class about magazine writing. The first few years I did this, I worried that I didn't really have enough experience to answer anybody's questions with the weighty authority they might expect—I was hardly removed from college myself. But by now, at the ripe old age of 29, my trip to BU sparks an entirely different concern: how to avoid coming off as the old guy who thinks he's wicked cool. For instance, I consider wearing my Red Hot Chili Peppers T-shirt to the class, but decide to go with a plain green tee instead. Ironically, to increase my coolness I'm trying not to appear as if I'm trying to be cool.

I don't see 29 as exceptionally old, but I know that when I was in college I thought people in their late 20s were ancient. By the time you reach your mid-20s, however, you begin to become aware of your age, which for guys comes when you realize that you're older than certain professional athletes. Your whole life, pro athletes are older than you, and then one day you're watching a Celtics game and realize you're actually older than Paul Pierce, and therefore you're probably not ever going to make the NBA. This knowledge, though obvious all along, is profoundly unsettling.

So there I am at BU, answering some journalism questions, when one girl asks which of my columns has generated the most response. I reply that it was probably the one I did about joining MySpace, simply because MySpace offers such a convenient venue for communicating with people and offering feedback. At this point, another girl blurts, "Aren't you kind of old to be on MySpace?"

I manage to stifle the first response that pops into my head—which involves a donkey and a suggestion of what this girl could do to improve her manners—and instead play it off with a joke. "C'mon," I say, "I'm only 46." Nobody laughs. Evidently, they think I might be 46. This has gone from bad to worse.

At the bottom of it, I'm afraid this girl is right: I'm Old Man River. The signs are everywhere: I bought PlayStation 2 essentially the first day it came out, but I'm having a hard time getting excited about PlayStation 3. I've never downloaded a ring tone. I often give up in the middle of a text message and just call. One of my friends recently bought a house in Weymouth. Another has a bid in for a place in Newburyport. Two (two!) friends of my wife (my wife!) are pregnant. I consider it unusual to go out on weeknights. This fall, for the first time in my life, I drove to Vermont for the sole purpose of looking at leaves on trees. Holy crap: I'm a leaf-peeper. That is f---ing lame.

It gets worse when historical perspective is applied. When I was in high school there was no Internet. When I was in college, there was no such thing as a hybrid car and everyone thought HDTV was something you caught after engaging in high-risk behavior in Bangkok. I was already 24 when the iPod came out (back in my day, we used "CD changers"). Really, at this point I should preorder a casket and start wearing Depends undergarments.

If there's a positive to nearing the big 3-0, it's that I happen to be engaged in a job that requires me to exercise the infantile/immature/dangerous lobe of my brain on a regular basis. Last week I drove nonstop from New York to Miami for the sole purpose of racing a FedEx Overnight package that I'd shipped from Manhattan. I've taken strongman lessons, attended a sex toy–sales party and used a Bentley as a gypsy cab. I have plans to go indoor skydiving. So what are you doing that's so great, Miss "Aren't You a Little Old For MySpace?" Oh: preparing for finals and a few months later, your impending entry into the cold and unforgiving world of adulthood, where all your friends have moved away and your future is a billowing cumulonimbus of uncertainty. But hey, at least you're not 29.

I kid, of course. I realize you probably didn't mean that statement to come off sounding as bitchy as it did, and, as a sign of good faith, if you were to send me a MySpace friend request, I'd approve it. But you can totally forget about making my Top 8.

THE COLLINS CARD

BY CHRIS COLLINS

FAREWELL, RED

For as long as we can remember, the Celtics Green was Red all over.

Despite the Celtics' new slogan, "Get into it," I'm having a hard time doing just that. And with the passing of Red Auerbach, I'm probably not alone here. By the time I was old enough to understand what the Celtics legend was really all about, his days as a coach were well over. But his impact on the game endured.

Red opened up the NBA to everyone, a true pioneer in a league marked by a serious racial divide. In a city that wasn't exactly known for its great race relations back in the '50s, '60s and '70s, Red cared about winning with the best players, period—and that's just what he did. He looked past the color of a man's skin and into the character of his soul.

He was Bill Belichick long before Belichick, in terms of separating his personal feelings from the team's business. And when it came to winning, he was all business.

Red was also a lot like Belichick in his devotion to the team concept. Throw your damn stats out the window. They don't matter. The only thing that matters is the score when the clock strikes 00:00. What Red could do—indeed, he elevated it to an art form—was get superstars to put aside their egos for the good of the team. The Celtics under his stewardship personified team basketball.

Forget Joe DiMaggio's 56-game hitting streak. That will fall before Red's record of seven straight championships in a major team sport. How the hell was he able to keep his players focused on winning when that's all they'd ever done? How did he avoid complacency after, say, the fourth or fifth consecutive championship?

Red was the first pro basketball coach to start five black men. It was revolutionary. He was jeered more than he was cheered for that decision. He didn't care. Auerbach was far ahead of his time when he made the greatest player in the history of the game, Bill Russell, the first black head coach. Red was again criticized. But he did what he thought was right.

Success followed him to the front office. Red went out of his way to get Dave Cowens, when others weren't so high on the undersized center. That move led to three more championships in the 1970s.

And then, of course, there was drafting Larry Bird as a junior. Many people thought Red was crazy. Bird was going to return to college. Why waste a No. 6 overall pick on a guy who couldn't help you for a year? I was only a kid back then, but I thought Red was crazy, too.

When he added Kevin McHale and Robert Parish in a trade for the first overall pick, Joe Barry Carroll, he was again questioned. Why give up on a future superstar like Carroll before he even played? Of course, Red probably knew he was getting two future Hall of Famers for one never-was.

One of Red's favorite sayings was, "I may not always be right, but I'm never wrong." I never understood that until now.

Red always looked at the big picture. Sure, he missed on a few players, but so did everyone else. But he never missed on the important ones, like Russell, Cowens, Bird, McHale and Parish.

On Opening Night 2006, plenty of those Celtics greats came out in force to pay respects to their hero. He was "an absolute giant in the field," said Celtics legend Bob Cousy. "He was relentless and produced the greatest basketball dynasty so far that this country has ever seen, and certainly that the NBA has ever seen. This is a personal loss for me. It's a personal loss for the city of Boston."

> RED WAS ABLE TO GET SUPERSTARS TO PUT ASIDE THEIR EGOS FOR THE GOOD OF THE TEAM.

Tom Heinsohn, a Celtics legend in his own right, added, "Nobody has had as much impact on a sport as Red Auerbach had on the game of basketball....He was exceptional at listening and motivating people to put out their very best. In my playing days he once gave me a loaded cigar, and six months later I gave him one—that was our relationship. We had a tremendous amount of fun, and the game of basketball will never see anyone else like him."

The last time I ran into Red, it was at the Kowloon restaurant on Route 1. Everyone has heard about his love affair with Chinese food. Kowloon had a special menu item—beef and shrimp with pea pods and water chestnuts in a black-bean sauce—just for him. He deserved that, and so much more.

Here's to Red Auerbach: a legend and one of a kind. IB

JENNIFER COOLIDGE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF PHOTOGRAPH BY GREG HENRY/THE LAMOINE PHOTO GROUP

Best known as "Stifler's mom" in the wildly successful American Pie trilogy, Norwell native Jennifer Coolidge graduated from Norwell High School and attended Emerson College. After moving to New York, she did improv and became a member of the Groundlings comedy troupe. Opposite Reese Witherspoon, she played the manicurist in Legally Blonde and its sequel, and she has appeared in Christopher Guest's popular ensemble comedies Best In Show and A Mighty Wind. Her other film credits include A Night at the Roxbury, Click, Pootie Tang, Zoolander, A Cinderella Story, Robots and Date Movie. In Guest's new film, For Your Consideration, she plays a diaper-service heiress–turned–film producer, and she just finished production on the comedy Epic Movie for 20th Century Fox. On television, she's lent her voice to King of the Hill and appeared on Seinfeld, Frasier, Sex and the City, Friends and Joey, in which she played Matt LeBlanc's agent. She lives in Los Angeles and New Orleans, where she has been actively involved in post-Katrina reconstruction.

"I KNOW THEY'RE KINDA RAUNCHY, BUT I LOVED THE CHARACTERS IN AMERICAN PIE. MAYBE IT'S BECAUSE I WAS IN THE MOVIES, BUT I THINK THEY WERE BETTER THAN PORKY'S."

Jonathan Soroff: First of all, you've achieved immortality as Stifler's mom. How do you feel about the fact that adolescent boys masturbate fantasizing about you?

Jennifer Coolidge: It's a lot better than 80-year-old men. Y'know, I hope that continues as long as I'm alive. I can't imagine anybody masturbating to my character in Legally Blonde.

JS: Or A Cinderella Story, in which you played Hilary Duff's wicked stepmother with that green crap all over your face.

JC: Yeah, if somebody's masturbating to that, they've got problems.

JS: So have you ever dated a younger man?

JC: Yeah, that's kinda who I date.

JS: So how low can you go?

JC: To be honest, I guess the youngest was when I hooked up with a kid who was maybe 19 or 20. I've hooked up with much younger than that, but I was their same age. [Laughs.]

JS: Do you think of yourself as a sex kitten?

JC: No. I mean, I do when I get into costume. I have a Russian spy outfit, with a big fur hat and big fur boots, that I feel kinda sexy in. I've worn it for a couple of Halloweens.

JS: So is Demi Moore livin' in a fool's paradise?

JC: No, I think from the outside it looks like she's livin' in paradise. I don't know them, but I think they look like they're having a really good time. I bet they have sex all the time.

JS: Ever read Benjamin Franklin's homage to older women?

JC: No, but I guess I should. I know George Bernard Shaw said something about how a woman's genitalia never age.

JS: And yet they grow wiser. So are you better at blowing kisses or winking, because that's what you always seem to be doing in red carpet photos.

JC: Y'know, that's really not my fault. [Laughs.] They tell you to do something. You stand there and they don't snap, and they say, "C'mon," so you do the corny stuff and that's what they print, but I've got plenty of much more intelligent looks going on that they never capture.

JS: They don't know about your degree in quantum physics. So how much has your chest had to do with your career?

JC: It might've helped in American Pie, but I weighed about 30 pounds less then. My boobs get bigger as I get older because I'm heavier. So I don't know that they got me the roles in the beginning, but maybe it helps with the sequels.

JS: So will we see American Pie V*?*

JC: I don't think so, but I have to say that doing those movies, it never felt redundant with that group of kids. It's always been as fun as the first one.

JS: Are they cinematic classics or latter-day Porky's*?*

JC: I know they're kinda raunchy, but I loved the characters in American Pie. Maybe it's because I was in the movies, but I think they were better than Porky's.

JS: Who's the funniest person you've ever worked with?

JC: Christopher Guest's movies are very improvisational, so you never know what anyone's going to say, and I've done scenes with Christopher where I couldn't keep it together. I think he's probably one of the funniest people I've ever met, as well as Eugene [Levy], Bob Balaban, Catherine O'Hara…

JS: Not Hilary Duff?

JC: She was really pretty.

JS: Very diplomatic.

JC: Sometimes you just don't get to know people. I don't know if she's funny or not.

JS: Is she the new Hayley Mills?

JC: She's way too sexy for that. When we did A Cinderella Story, I remember thinking that for 16 or however old she was at the time she had a very strong sexuality going on. You can see why the young boys go for her.

JS: Do you ever want to do serious roles?

JC: Of course I do. But I can't tell if my agent doesn't ever pitch me for that stuff or people just don't think I can do it. Who knows?

JS: I think of you as a comedienne. I've never seen you in anything serious.

JC: I haven't either. But y'know, you buy all these things, like I bought two houses in New Orleans, and you end up taking jobs that are offered to you because you have to pay for things, and y'know, they're not offering me the lead role in War of the Worlds. I wish they would.

JS: Why the houses in New Orleans?

JC: I bought them right before the storm. My sister lives there, which is my only connection to the place, but I just fell in love with the town, and I just can't get enough of it.

JS: When you lived in New York, you were a bit of a party girl. What's the wildest thing you ever did?

JC: Well, it was actually in Hawaii. I met these two surfers and I liked them both but they were roommates, so I told them that I had an identical twin, and I went out with both guys for about a week and a half.

JS: So who says you're not a great actress?

JC: I know! It was pretty draining. But that really is true. I really did that. I think it's one of the most creative things I've pulled off, and I really felt fulfilled. [Laughs.]

JS: Funniest movie you've ever seen?

JC: The hardest I've ever laughed in a theater is hands-down the first time I saw Waiting for Guffman. I remember choking, thinking I wasn't going to make it. I think Corky was one of the funniest roles ever.

JS: All things being equal, like not counting your $25 million a picture salary, do you prefer the stage to film?

JC: The wonderful thing about doing improv is that all your bad moments are forgotten by the next day, but the great thing about film is that they can edit you.

JS: Are you Norwell High's most distinguished alum?

JC: No, I think Jeff Corwin is above me, probably, but I don't know if he's getting $25 million a picture.

JS: Last question: Is everything we see on you real?

JC: No. I have a cap on one of my teeth and my eyeballs were taken out three years ago and replaced with a deeper brown. Oh, and one other thing. I do wear a blonde merkin so the carpet matches the drapes. IB hat's that? Your good friends are getting married and they're all registered at Pottery Barn? You'd like to get them something a little more creative than one-eighth of their flatware setting? You're going to a shower, but you refuse to go to the @!#% Baby Gap again? You want to buy a dress for the company holiday party without fear that she'll show up in the same outfit? Let me walk you over to the South End. They might just have what you're looking for. The same district that draws discerning diners in droves boasts a cadre of strollers (including many pushing strollers) browsing its growing number of boutiques.

SHOPPING GUIDE

To an outsider, the South End and the Back Bay are hard to tell apart. Both exude Old Boston charm, and they even share a number of streets. But to a Bostonian, the differences are evident the minute you cross Columbus Ave.: It's friendlier and more laid-back in the South End, where neighbors seem to have magically shed the famed Boston coldness.

The contrast can also be seen in your shopping choices: During the past few years, a minor revolution in shopping has taken root in the shadow of Copley Place. The Back Bay's Restoration Hardware, Banana Republic and Baby Gap are countered by the South End's Red River Trading Co., Uniform and Sooki. Independently owned shops and boutiques have sprouted up, adding new flavor to the already restaurant-rich district. Now shoppers go to the South End expecting to find unique gifts, clothing and accessories. What's more, especially around the holidays, they may also find fewer crowds.

As a South End resident married to an interior designer, I have more occasion than most guys to poke my head into the shops. On a recent Saturday, my wife and I set out to find various home goods for clients and several gifts, including a few badly overdue wedding presents (Emily Post couldn't be reached for comment). The day's barely begun and the c-word is already flying: cute, cute, cute, cute, cute.

In Motley, on Tremont Street, cute perfectly captures the illustrated French alphabet tiles we pick up for a niece's christening. Living up to its name, Motley's a fun jumble of merchandise in a 380-square-foot garden-level shop. If you're in the market for cheap sunglasses, a fashionable track suit, novel tees or a coffee-table book on the history of CBGB, Motley is your kind of place. Owner Doug Palardy credits his eclectic assortment of goods to having grown up in a goldenrod-colored mobile home and the challenges of organizing his many interests in a 48-square-foot childhood bedroom.

Motley Home is Motley's kissing cousin. Though the homegoods store is owned independently by Jimmy Ward and Jim Conner, the two establishments share a brand name and a philosophy: "Sell things you love, and don't take things too seriously." Whereas Motley concentrates on personal gifts and apparel, Motley Home is a spirited mish-mash of things you need (glasses, cooking implements), things to give as house-warming gifts (funky placemats, retro-chic wine holders, ultra-stylish aprons) and things that all shoppers should experience (9 to 5 playing on the flat-screen TV, with Dolly Parton covering "Stairway to Heaven" on the store's stereo system).

Cute doesn't even begin to describe Tadpole, Storey Hieronymus Hauck's brand new children's clothing and accessories shop. Hauck has already enjoyed success with her women's clothing boutique, Turtle, which has a devoted following and keeps a keen eye on emerging designers. Tadpole and Turtle aim to keep the 'hood's ever-increasing stroller crowd—and its pram pushers—en vogue.

The South End retail scene boasts elegance, too. Hudson, on Shawmut Ave. at the base of Union Park, is a compact labyrinth of Oly chairs and Jonathan Adler ottomans. Treasures abound here for the interior decorator, trade pro and DIY-er alike.

Arriving at Garage Sale—a high-end consignment shop for the home—with a decorator is like taking a 5-year-old to the circus; unbridled excitement ensues. Knowledgeable co-owner Nancy Farrington, a longtime ad-exec recruiter, makes you feel as though you've been invited into her estate, and as she leads us through the labyrinth of Dennis Duffy tables and Bergére chairs, I find myself wondering when our hostess will offer us a drink. Alas, it doesn't happen. We do, however, manage to score a pair of sconces for a client before heading out for our next destination.

But the drinks idea has taken hold. Although the South End has become Boston's restaurant mecca, there are surprisingly few spots to get an afternoon cocktail. Most men would agree that this much shopping merits something strong, and Aquitaine, being one of a few full-service (read: beer, wine and liquor) bars in the neighborhood that's open during the afternoon, fills the bill. A Maker's Mark and a Bloody later (his and hers), it's off to buy wedding gifts for friends who are already celebrating their second anniversary.

The South End's boutiques are nearly all independently owned, and an owner's moods and space reflect his or her personality. Many proprietors invest in the district in a personal way, seeking out talented local artists, designers and craftsmen to bolster their inventory. Case in point is Ned Hand's store, Fresh Eggs, stocked with unusual housewares and gifts that scream, "No, I didn't come from Pottery Barn." That uniqueness of inventory means you reduce the risk of giving someone a duplicate gift. From different soaps to candle accessories and handcrafted furniture that suit a range of budgets and tastes, walking into Fresh Eggs is like hitting the gift-giving lotto.

Fresh Eggs is an elder statesman amongst the youthful crop of South End boutiques, but Hand has remained true to her mission of showcasing emerging artists and design talent alongside affordable gifts. Each month, she picks an artist to showcase in the shop's space and hosts an opening party/neighborhood gathering. We select a couple of candlestick holders that are somewhere between The Magnificent Ambersons and The Jetsons for the oldy-weds, then hit the bricks.

> Independently owned shops have sprouted up, adding new flavor to the already restaurant-rich district.

Just around the corner, Vellum does double duty, selling beautiful paper merchandise as gifts as well as custom-designing the announcements that let people know gifts are in order. Specializing in stationery, greeting cards and invitations, Vellum has built a devoted clientele that stays with them from engagement through wedding and births. The inventory also features holiday cards, ribbon, wrapping paper and notes designed by local artists such as the popular Felix Doolittle, a Newton-based artist who's attracted an international following.

Upon exiting Vellum, a craving hits and it's off to Lionette's Market, attached to the Garden of Eden on Tremont Street, to survey the stock of exotic chocolates. Pleased to find that Lionette's now offers Taza's chocolate-covered cacao, we sample a few pieces before leaving the shop with several boxes in hand as emergency "hostess gifts," wondering aloud if any hostesses will ever receive them.

Francophiles and Anglophiles have been at odds since roughly 1066, but the South End has something for both. Tucked away on Thayer Street is the granddaddy of them all, Bobby From Boston, a laundry pile for the Anglophile since the late '70s. It's even rumored that this vintage-clothing store, selling top-quality British togs, has secretly been the inspiration for many of Ralph Lauren's clothes and retail outlets. Resembling a Harrovian dorm raid, Bobby's quietly peddles cool public schoolboy looks alongside updated fashions.

Meanwhile, representing the other side of the pond, Voilà has been selling French/European furniture and objets d'art for nearly a year, and Heidi Thiede's relocation of her South Shore shop to the South End has been a boon for anyone in search of that Belgian zinc chair or antique farmhouse dining table. Most of her inventory comes directly from the French countryside, and the shop is spacious enough to display a good amount of it.

If a pooch occupies a place on your holiday shopping list, Polka Dog Bakery co-owners Rob VanSickle and Deb Gregg have just the thing you're looking for. Perfectly perched a block down from Peter's Park, Polka Dog is ground zero for South End dog lovers, stocking chew toys, chicken poppers, birthday cakes and more Fido foodstuffs than can be catalogued. We pick up a grab bag for my father-in-law's dog, Gus.

At long last, 5 o'clock arrives, and it's time to head off in search of the perfect martini. Because even credit card receipts look better through the filter of dimmed lights and cocktails. IB

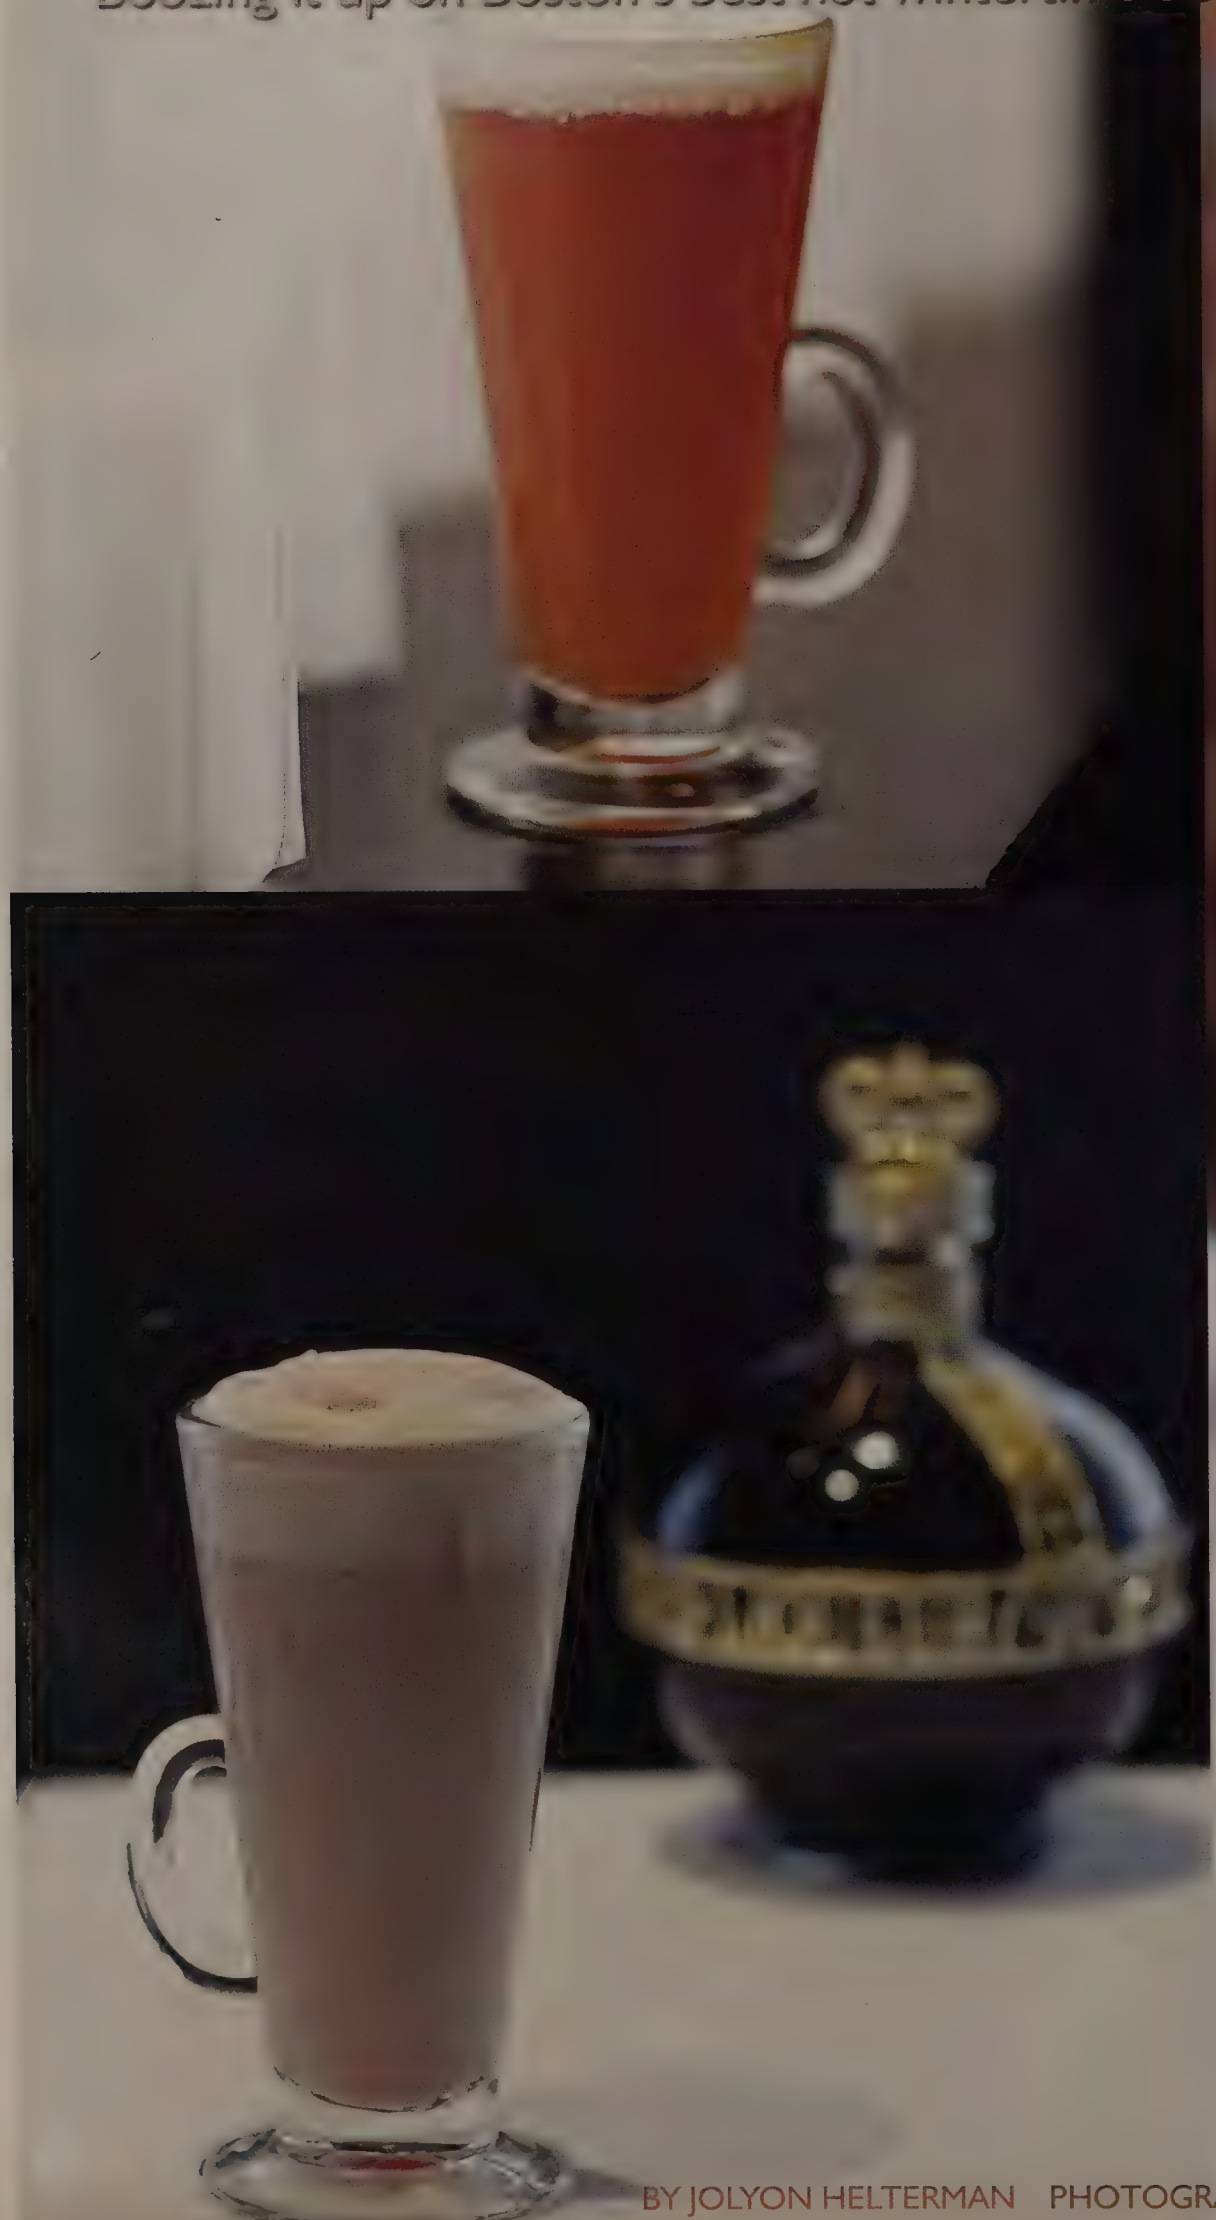
A Heated Discussion

Boozing it up on Boston's best hot wintertime beverages



BY JOLYON HELTERMAN PHOTOGRAPHS BY LAURA KOZLOWSKI

t first, scouring Boston for the best hot boozy drinks seemed like the cushiest assignment ever. While my colleagues were swigging bad coffee in front of their Macs back at the office, I'd be sitting pretty in the city's best bars knocking back hot toddies and mulled ciders, gamely gorging myself on seasonal spirit and deliberating such minutiae as whipped-cream tuft height and nutmeg distribution—all in the name of work. 'Tis true that nothing rings in the holidays quite like getting completely loaded on somebody else's dime.

With three hard-core drinking buddies in tow, my plan was to hit the city's surfeit of cozy, old-school hotel bars—the kind with vaulted ceilings, bow-tied servers and enormous, leather-bound drink menus. I'd order for the table, sample each concoction, then let my guests finish them off as I compiled tasting notes. With any luck, I'd wrap the story up in a single night.

Halfway through the second round of drinks, I began to panic. This wasn't the plum assignment I'd envisioned at all. Drink after drink, at venue after venerable venue, these hot cocktails were shaping up to be a truly vexing lot. Many were cloyingly sweet, others were as noxious as jet fuel, while still others offended the palate with oddly dissonant flavors you'd have to scarf down an entire Whitman's Sampler to find in one place again.

All told, we sampled more than 40 different hot drinks that first evening, a mere two of which would end up in my eventual Top 10. The Cloud Nine Hot Chocolate ($8.95) at Finale (1 Columbus Ave., Boston; 617-423-3184) stood out among an entire page of less inspired hot drink offerings, the rich, complexly layered Valrhona hot cocoa playing off a luscious combination of Kahlua (coffee liqueur), Frangelico (hazelnut liqueur) and Bailey's Irish cream. The other winner was a particularly elegant take on Irish coffee by the Four Seasons restaurant Aujourd'hui (200 Boylston St., Boston; 617-338-4400), the Café Amber ($14), which pairs coffee with Frangelico and Amber Macallan Liqueur, a maple-flavored cordial made from single-malt scotch. The coolest part (literally and figuratively): a frozen rosette of whipped cream, which melts slowly enough to last to the bottom of the drink.

And so the quest stretched on... to three weeks, and more than 75 hot drinks tasted, from the outer reaches of Somerville to the plains of Jamaica. At the end of it all, I'd managed to come up with just 10 I'd order again, but the experience taught me some valuable lessons—tricks to finding great hot boozy drinks without suffering all the duds. These I pass along here, as my holiday gift to you. As they say: Give a man a fish, and he'll eat for a day. But teach a man to drink like a fish, and he'll drink well for a lifetime.

Happy fishing.

Rule 1:

Beware the accommodating bartender.

Sure, he's heard of them. No, there aren't any on the menu, per se, but he'd be glad to whip you up whatever you want, if you just tell him what you like, and yada, yada, yada.... Slow and steady now: "No, thanks—I'll just have a vodka tonic." Practice it in the mirror if you have to. While in most situations an accommodating bartender is a godsend, when it comes to hot booze, navigating without a recipe is a recipe for disaster. Hot drinks are simply less forgiving than cold ones.

What's the difference? Without getting all molecular in the middle of a fluffy IMPROPER article, humans simply taste things better when they (the things) are warm as opposed to cold. Coldness masks flaws; warmness amplifies them. Get the proportions of rotgut vodka, almost-flat tonic water and day-old lime wedge even stupidly out of whack, and most of us wouldn't so much as register the offense—thanks to the masking powers of ice-cold anything. But dribble an extra thimbleful of top-shelf whiskey into a 140-degree cauldron of coffee and Redi-Whip, and you'll be wishing Rude Aunt Suzie were there to help you demand a full refund. Think of it this way: There's a reason Americans drink their canned Buds ice-cold while those show-off Belgians are willing to subject their fancy brews to a revealing room temperature.

If you absolutely, positively must have some sort of hot drink and there's nothing on the menu, ask Accommodating Bartender for a Bailey's and coffee, with the Bailey's on the side. Then make like you're at the Starbucks condiments bar, you crazy mixologist, you, and adjust to your palate's content.

Rule 2:

More than three or four, head for the door.

If the hot drinks list is a page long, chances are it contains at least a few land mines—ill-conceived combinations that make the soda-fountain improvisations seem like a time-tested family recipe. Also, when a drink menu lists just a few hot options, chances aren't bad that your bartender can execute every one of the recipes well. The higher the number, the lower the chances of success.

A textbook adherent to this principle is Stella (1525 Washington St., Boston; 617-247-7747), the trendy, ultra-mod Italian eatery in the South End. The sole hot alcoholic drink on the menu, Stella's Hot Cocoa ($8) is an unctuous, chocolaty testament to the wisdom of consummate focus. Bartender Michael starts off with top-quality hot cocoa, but that's only part of the reason this concoction tastes so complex. The other 43 flavors you detect—including vanilla, cinnamon and citrus—come courtesy of Licor 43 (pronounced in the Spanish, "cuarenta y tres"), an intensely aromatic, bright yellow liqueur, as well as the nutmeg that's freshly grated onto the whipped-cream topping. The end sum is about as sophisticated and grown-up a take on hot chocolate as you're likely to find. Valrhona, shmalrhona.

Another disciple of the less-is-more school of bartending, Pigalle (75 Charles St. South, Boston; 617-423-4944), the cozy French restaurant in the Theatre District, offers just four hot drinks, two of which made my Top 10. The Apricot Cider ($10), a simple yet surprisingly transformative twist on traditional cider, pairs steamed apple cider with a stiff shot of apricot brandy (rather than the usual rum), garnished with a dollop of fresh whipped cream. As the creamy topping slowly melts down into the steamy apricot-apple abyss, the interplay of temperatures, flavors and textures—warm/cool, sweet/tart, creamy/wet—must be tasted to be believed. Insomniacs should check out Pigalle's La Vie en Rose ($10), a soothing blend of steamed milk, Mathilde Framboise (a raspberry liqueur) and Chambord (another raspberry liqueur) that tastes like a piping-hot berry milk shake, though not nearly so sweet. The only thing missing from this potent, sleep-inducing potion is the powdered-Lunesta sprinkles.

Heed the cocktail geek.

Getting the finicky hot cocktail's proportions just so can make a person crazy. Which brings us to Rule 3: The obsessive, perfection-crazed bartender is the hot-cocktail hobbyist's best friend. So how do you know if you've got a bona fide cocktail geek in your midst? It's often a tough call: They can look and act just like the non-obsessive variety, and you won't know until you've sampled their wares. In other cases, the signs are more readily apparent.

For example, no sooner did I express a more-than-casual interest in the celebrated Tom and Jerry ($11) at No. 9 Park (9 Park St., Boston; 617-742-9991) than the restaurant's principal bartender, John Gertsen, began a libational-history lesson that would last almost an hour. "You can thumb through these while I make a fresh batch of batter in the kitchen!" Gertsen said, heaving a stack of original printings of The Bon-Vivant's Companion (1927), The Official Mixer's Manual (1934) and other classic cocktail-making guides onto my placemat. Invented by famed 19th-century barman Jerry Thomas, the beverage was named either by inverting his own, or after "Tom and Jerrys," a once-popular nickname for sketchy pubs.

And yes, the Tom and Jerry requires a "batter." Whisk egg whites until frothy in one bowl; blend egg yolks with sugar and spices in another; then gently fold the whites into the yolks. To serve, fill a mug with a tablespoon of batter and an ounce each of cognac and rum, then add hot milk. The milk makes the batter fluff up dramatically. "It's like drinking a pancake!" said Gertsen, as he unpacked crates of antique mugs made expressly for serving Tom and Jerrys.

One sip of this delicious concoction, and my plans to demand Gertsen's lunch money on the way out the door were but a distant memory. Thanks to the thick batter, the alcohol and spices are not evenly distributed but, rather, concentrated in pockets. The warm, billowy expanse of exotically spiced cream, soothing and benign, is interrupted by the first powerful hit of cognac and rum, then soothed just as abruptly. To me, it's like drinking a big, boozy soufflé.

Although Beacon Hill has more than its fair share of obsessive scholars, cocktail geekery is alive and well in J.P. as well. John Byrd, mixologist at the Alchemist Lounge (435 South Huntington Ave., Jamaica Plain; 617-477-5741), has been tinkering around in his basement workshop (just below the bar) making all manner of infused booze, which he's incorporating into his brand-new cocktail menu. His latest creation, the Buena Vista ($8), makes use of potcheen, an obscure 90-proof grain alcohol also known as "Irish moonshine," in which Bird soaks vanilla beans and cardamom pods for two weeks. An exotic variation on Irish coffee, the drink blends coffee and the infused liquor, topped with a Bailey's-spiked whipped cream. An Irish classic with an inflection of the East, this is fusion cuisine at its best.

Rule 4:
No toddy's perfect.

Some things taste a lot better than their names would suggest—Bloody Marys, kidney beans, pork butt. With the hot toddy, it's precisely the opposite. The evocative name—conjuring visions of cozying up by the fireplace après a day on the slopes with a mug-full-o'-cure-for-what-ails-ya—is about the only positive thing it's got going on. Were the hot toddy called, say, "hot whiskey water," an eminently more honest description, far fewer dupes would be coaxed into partaking. The problem with most hot toddies is a lack of sweetness. With hot water, whiskey and lemon as the core components, it takes an awful lot of sugar (or, in some cases, honey) to balance out such acidity and bitterness.

One version I'd gladly order again, however, is the Alchemist Lounge Hot Toddy ($6). Made with Wild Turkey Rye, hot water, honey, a splash of fresh-squeezed lemon and orange juice and a clove-studded orange wheel, the drink is a masterpiece of balance. No, no toddy's perfect—but this one comes awfully close, putting the viler versions of the drink to shame.

The Tom and Jerry at No. 9 Park

Hot Rum Cider at Grendel's Den

Rule 5:
Just say no to floating bits.

Nothing kills the mood of sipping cockles-warming cocktails with a loved one on a frosty winter's eve than hacking up a wayward clove, or choking on stray fresh cranberries. (To wit: Three weeks later, I'm still coughing up random bits of spearmint from an ill-conceived, $15 experiment code-named "Hot Mojito Tea.") If it doesn't resemble a drinking straw (yes, cinnamon sticks get a bye here), it shouldn't be bobbing around in your drink.

No. 9 Park's Gertsen solves the no-floaties dilemma by extracting the essence before serving. The Bishop ($11), another obscure but classic cocktail from the days of yore, arrives looking like little more than a tall mug of red wine. But the clean, unmuddled appearance belies the complexity secreted within. To make the drink, Gertsen roasts a clove-studded orange in a sauté pan, along with mace, cinnamon, ginger and lemon zest (the roasting process helps "bloom" the flavors), before using the whole mess to steep a blend of port and cherry brandy. Straining the mixture into a glass yields all of the roasty, toasty flavor, with none of the choking hazard. It's absolutely delicious, and your trachea will thank you later.

Rule 6:
Price and quality aren't always linked.

Just because a hot drink costs an arm and a leg doesn't mean it's worth a place in your belly. While it's a fact that five bucks can buy you an altogether disappointing Irish coffee at any number of pubs around town, you can spend $15 at a fancy hotel bar for something just as wretched—albeit with better-looking glassware (and, quite possibly, a doily). Thankfully, however, the opposite holds true as well.

One hidden gem can be found at Grendel's Den (89 Winthrop St., Cambridge; 617-491-1160), the popular basement-level hangout in Harvard Square. What you're looking for here is gurgling away in a Crock-Pot plugged into an outlet behind the bar. For just $4.75, the barman will ladle out a steamy glass of Hot Rum Cider, a heady concoction that avoids this simple recipe's all-too-common pitfalls. Heat tends to highlight the sweet, overripe quality of apple cider. But the right dose of hard liquor (in this case, rum) stands in for the apple's natural acidity—diminished during ripening—restoring enough of the missing tanginess to balance the sweetness. Finally, in the Grendel's version, a cinnamon stick provides a subtle spicy nuance. And it just looks so pretty doing it.

Admittedly, my quest for the perfect 10 took place at the very start of the season, and as of press time, several august Boston institutions were still busy tweaking recipes to be rolled out over the coming weeks. Among the most promising (given the caliber of their bar programs) Aquitaine, Eastern Standard (whose bar manager, Jackson Cannon, belongs to the same cocktail-geek club, the Jack Rose Society, as No. 9 Park's Gertsen), Excelsior, Restaurant L (at Louis Boston), Spire and Union Bar & Grille. So consider this list your winter starter kit—10 tasty drinks to tide you over until you've found your own favorite gems.

Like shiny-wrapped packages, even gorgeously garnished holiday drinks can contain stuff you just don't want. Here's to avoiding the duds and seizing the sweetest. IB

Present Perfect

BY MARNI ELYSE KATZ PHOTOGRAPHS BY TONY SCARPETTA

Holiday shopping is fraught with pitfalls: Will it fit her? Does it clash with their drapes? Does he already own it?! To help you in your quest for just the right gifts, we hit Boston shops and uncovered a trove of fabulous finds. Our picks include something for most people on your list: the kooky roommate, the ever-tasteful aunt, the suave exec and the geek who won't grow up. As for the fruitcake lover in your life—well, you're not the one who needs help there.

Under Glass

Découpage plates and paperweights, by John Derian, $30–$300 at Good; 88 Charles St., 617-722-9200.

Collages of flowers and animal prints are painted and pieced together in layers under glass, resulting in gorgeous plates and paperweights that fashionable homebodies will declare divine.

Solid Gold

3.1 Phillip Lim skinny scarf, $175 at Dress; 221 Newbury St., 617-424-7125.

Fashionistas will fawn over this gold-thread silk and Lurex scarf with beaded fringe. Subtle, yet so rich-looking—and versatile enough to complement coats of every color.

Twigs for Two

Twig sugar and creamer set, by Michael Aram; $105 at Koo de Kir, 65 Chestnut St., 617-723-8111.

Nature lovers can bring the outdoors inside with these pretty, silver-plated pieces, designed by an American artist based in India who creates his works in ceramic before casting them.

The Luxe Life

Caviar for two, $75 at the Little Pearl; www.littlepearl.com, 888-61-BLINI.

This little taste of splendor, perfect for your fanciest foodie friends, includes two types of caviar and blini. Throw in an ice-cold bottle of your favorite vodka or champagne for a truly pampering experience.

Amped Up

Paul Westerberg signature guitar, $180 at First Act Guitar Studio; 745 Boylston St., 617-226-7899.

Trader by day, rocker by night... in his dreams. Help him act out his garage-band fantasy with this electric guitar designed for the Replacements' Paul Westerberg.

Leaves and Grass

Nature glasses, by Pols Potten, $85 for a set of four at Lekker Home; 1317 Washington St., 617-542-6464.

Imported from Amsterdam, this cluster of glasses etched with patterns of foliage makes sipping juice a beautiful experience.

Penguin, My Love

Fauna pillows, by Salvor, $50–$86 at Tadpole; 37 Clarendon St., 617-778-1788.

Forget fussy, stuffy, beaded and tasseled pillows. These hand-printed whimsies bring a touch of fun to the parlor or boudoir. The local favorite? The Boston Terrier print, of course.

Chilly Dog

Dog vest, $39 at PolkaDog; 256 Shawmut Ave., 617-338-5155.

Even shy little pooches will want to strike a pose in this reversible hooded vest with faux fur–trimmed hood and easy-snap buttons. The water-resistant outer shell and polar-fleece lining will have them howling with pleasure.

File It Away

Cheetah-print manicure kit, by Dr. Carolyn Collection, $50 at the Beauty Mark; 33 Charles St., 617-720-1555.

Beauty junkies will swoon over this oh-so-cute kit, equipped with eight medical-grade implements.

Sugar Cube

Sugar Stacks ring, by Paloma Picasso, $925–$5,500 each at Tiffany & Co.; Copley Place, 617-353-0222.

Make no mistake: When you slide this bright bauble on her finger, she'll know you're sweet on her. Stones available include rubellite, lemon quartz, peridot and amethyst.

Double Vision

DocuPen portable scanner, by PlanOn, $299 at CompUSA; 205 Market St., Brighton, 617-783-1900.

It may look like a pen, but don't worry about staining your shirts. This handheld scanner will make the geekiest cubicle dweller feel like a superspy—James Bond meets bond paper.

It's a Wrap

Drake's London men's scarf, $135 at Barneys New York; Copley Place, 617-385-3300.

Plaid scarves are so '90s. These high-quality woolen wonders are striped in unexpected color combos and widths, for trend-setting style. They're cozy, too.

Flying High

Lindbergh Hour Angle watch, by Longines, $4,100 at DePrisco Jewelers; 333 Washington St., 617-227-3339.

With its oversized, onion-shaped winder and bezels, this recently reissued timepiece that once helped pilots determine longitude displays truly timeless style.

Rock Solid

Quartz-and-agate ring, by Magpie jewelry, $138 at Stil; Chestnut Hill Mall, 617-527-7845.

She wants a great big bauble; you want to stay within your budget. This multistone ring in Tiffany blue has wowing power.

Shiny Little Pill

Crystal pillboxes, by Madeline Beth, $160 at Stash; 63A Union St., Newton Centre, 617-969-1660.

Your hilarious (if a bit unbalanced) BFF will get a boost from these adorable pillboxes encrusted with hundreds of tiny handset Swarovski crystals. Maybe now she'll remember to take her meds.

Boy Toy

Sony Playstation 3, $500–$600 at EB Games; CambridgeSide Galleria, 617-494-1340.

Go ahead and splurge on this season's It gaming system. Don't you want him to be the coolest kid on the block? IB

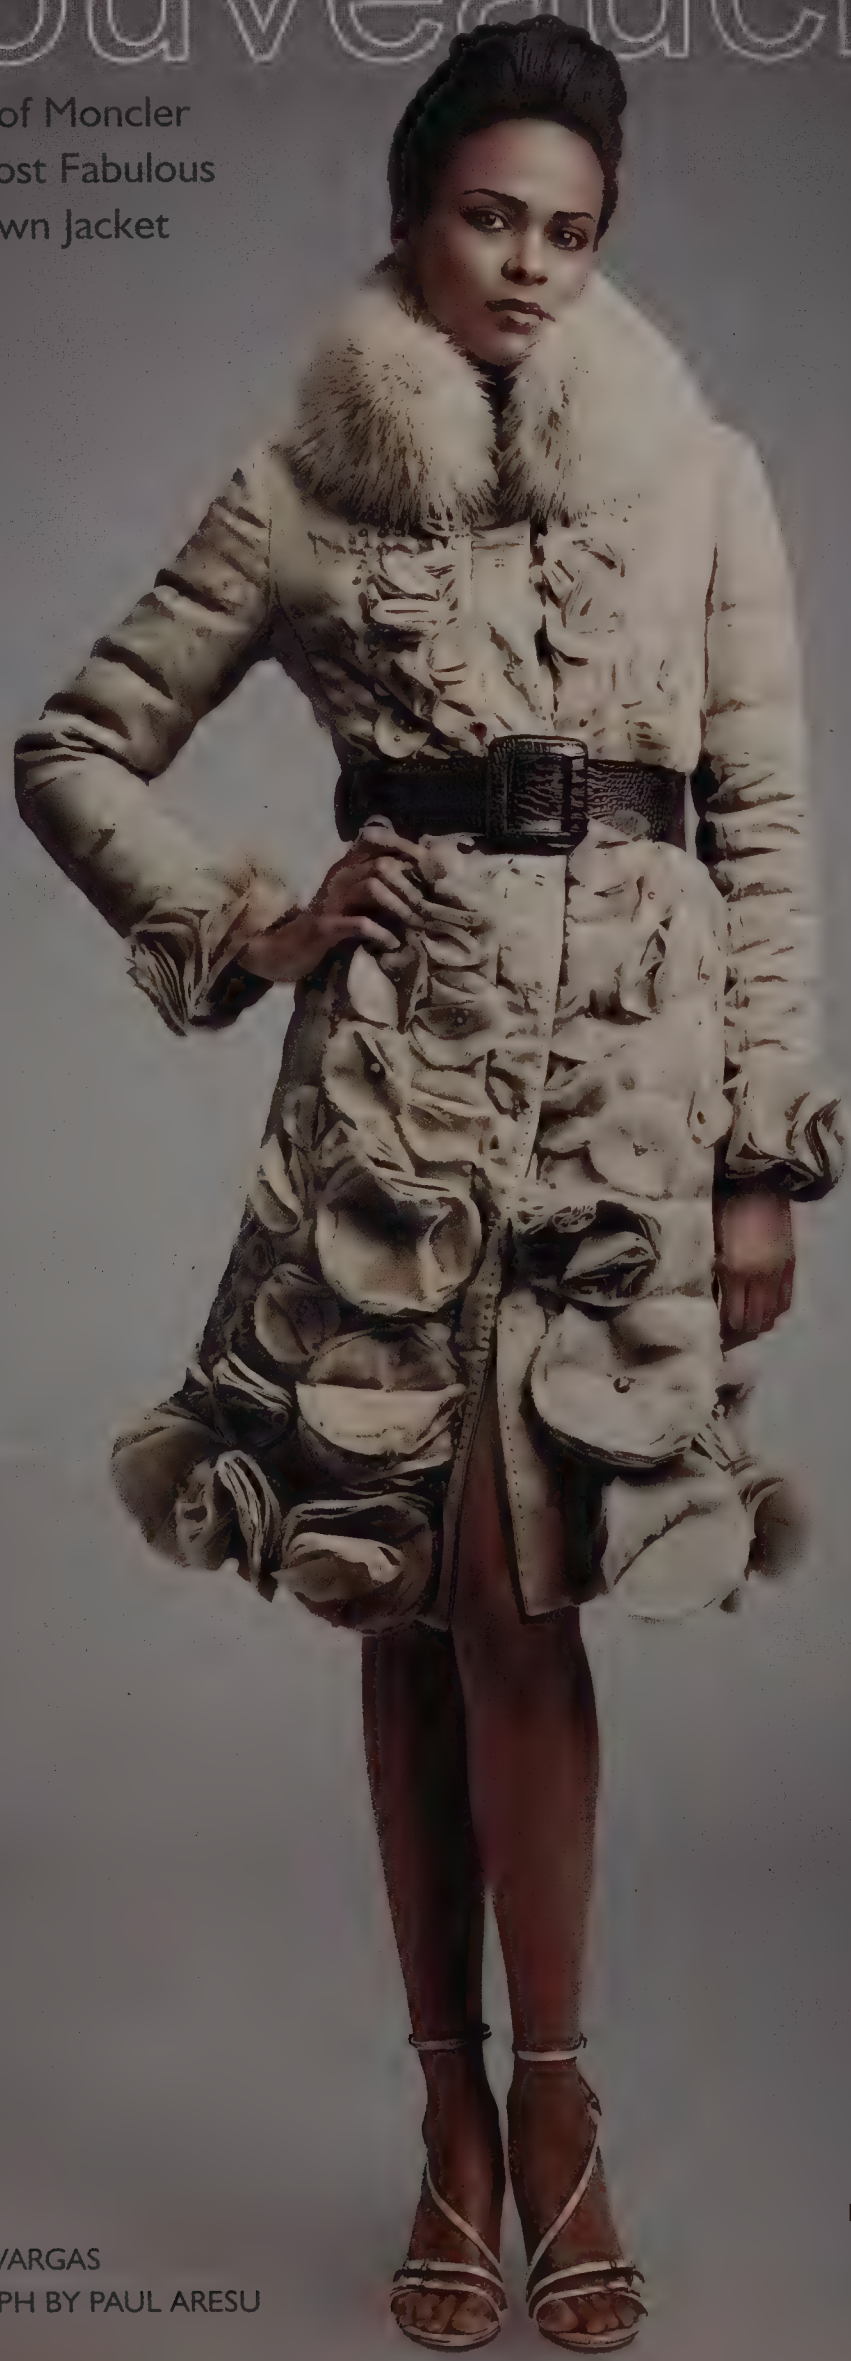
The story of Moncler and the Most Fabulous Goose Down Jacket



Poudre de Diamant ivory, quilted down coat with crystal-and-silk-organza appliqués and fox collar

BY VICTOR VARGAS
PHOTOGRAPH BY PAUL ARESU

lessandra Facchinetti's résumé reads like a who's who Italian fashion houses. A native of Bergamo, Italy, and ec cated in Milan, the 34-year-old designer has already put h stamp on Prada's Miu Miu line, and she trained with To Ford, later succeeding him as head designer at Guc Recently she's taken on the intriguing project of reint preting the quilted down jacket for Moncler's Gam Rouge collection—with gorgeous results. More red carp than ski slope, her coats incorporate dazzling details l raised padding, graduated circles of layered organza a quilted mink, a 1950s luxe classic. Never has down out wear looked so glamorous. We caught up with Facchin to discuss her latest collection.

Victor Vargas: Your fall/winter 2006 Gamme Rouge collection for Moncler is very glamorous. What inspired y
Alessandra Facchinetti: I wanted something very diff ent and special. Each garment has a story of its own a features elegant embroidery and shapes that go beyond seasonal preconceptions.
VV: Will you continue in this direction, or do you feel that a return to less ornamentation will inform your next collection?
AF: I'm still working in the same direction to create so thing resplendent and luxurious for next season.
VV: The collection, with its use of exquisite fabrics and ra of techniques, easily lends itself to eveningwear. How do y suggest one approach it for day?
AF: I'm thinking about a woman who wants to feel c fortable and perfect the entire day; morning, noon night. She can wear Gamme Rouge with a pair of jeans a T-shirt or with a skirt and a cashmere pullover and fee need to change outfits at any time.
VV: Which is your favorite piece in this collection and wh
AF: I'm in love with the jacket called Sculpture de Ne initially conceived in silver but terrific even in black. I lo because I would wear it myself with a white T-shirt, b silk palazzo pants and high heels.
VV: You went from designing a men's and women's collec (Miu Miu) to a very sexy women's collection (Gucci) to concentrating on the quilted jacket for Moncler. What we different in designing this collection?
AF: Working with duvet (down-filled quilted fabric) growing up. I spent seven years at Miu Miu and it was for a change. I felt a lot more mature going into Gucci, then it was time for a new experience. I'm growing designer, and my creativity is expanding as well.
VV: Tell us about your jewelry for Gamme Rouge.
AF: I decided that a small collection of costume jew brooches, pendants and belts would provide an ecce touch of elegance.
VV: Who's your favorite shoe designer and why?
AF: Christian Louboutin because he loves women, I love the way he treats proportion and shape. I lov unexpected details, which reveal the sexy part of the VV: What's your take on haute couture?
AF: I think it's important in terms of reference—it's a of getting inside the history of fashion from the beginn use it for mixing, like in Gamme Rouge, elegant pat with a sporty fit, because I love the contrast.

FANCY FOOD, COMFORT TOO

J.J. Gonson, owner of Cuisine en Locale (617-285-0167; www.enlocale.com), helps you "get out of the kitchen and enjoy your party" by cooking and serving meals in your home for gatherings of any size.

The joy of cooking and the joy of entertaining can be deeply at odds, as the toiling hostess hears party laughter twinkling from the other room while, lonely, she hoists the roast. Consider hiring Cuisine en Locale to cook and serve at your house—for a large party, or even for a pampered select few. With a wide range of scrumptious recipes and ideas, not just a takeout list, the lively and receptive Gonson will meet with you to discuss your wishes and food curiosities. She can accommodate most any restriction: For the almond-allergic, for instance, she'll sub in a hazelnut torte. Though a few people give her actual recipes, Cuisine en Locale will propose dishes and menus, ranging from ethnic and international to cozy and upscale-homey—lobster risotto, cabbage stuffed with lentils and nuts, and Mexican pumpkin soup. A seated and plated (use those wedding gifts!) dinner will involve servers working from disciplined schedules in the kitchen, where the ghostess/hostess enters not. Gonson emphasizes the balanced and organic meal, albeit fancier ones than childhood meat and potatoes. The Slow Food revolution that highlights the savoring and awareness of texture and beauty is an influence. And best of all, Cuisine en Locale leaves your kitchen sparkling, leftovers temptingly packed.

LOOSE LIPS FROM THE HEREAFTER

The Strange Case of Hellish Nell*, by Nina Shandler, is the true story of Helen Duncan and the witch trial of WWII.

Shrewd, crude, talented, tormented and, at times, just plain wild, Helen Duncan was a psychic who rocked more than spirits during WWII. Beginning with a mystical childhood visitation from her brother, who had died before Helen (or Nell) was born, to her séances, this Highland-peasant mother of six, who spoke in a thick Scottish brogue, channeled a spirit guide named Albert. By contrast, he was a refined gentleman with a proper Oxford accent "100 percent BBC." Mystically working together, Nell/Albert predicted some major upcoming events of the war, including top-secret British ship movements the authorities wanted to keep under wraps. To quell Nell, they tried her in court under the Witchcraft Act of 1735—in 1944. The book, speckled with footnotes citing many sources, is written like a thriller. Author Nina Shandler, a family therapist in Amherst, brings this, yes, spirited woman to life, complete with swoonings and howlings and mad rages. Like a magician displaying empty hands, Nell would appear nude to prove she was concealing nothing, and that the "ectoplasms" she summoned were truly ethereal, not props or scarves. Nell's detractors, and those skeptical of spiritualism, made the court case, leading to jail, wildly dramatic. As is the whole book.

PUT ON A HAPPY FABRIC

The Marimekko store at 350 Huron Ave., Cambridge (617-354-2800), the former site of Huron Drug, revives some famous styles.

For anyone with a memory of Design Research in Cambridge, coming into the recently opened Marimekko Store brings an incredible reminiscent tingle. Those vivacious Scandinavian flowers, once faded from America, have burst back into vivid, colorful life. The iconic pink-and-red design of oversized cockeyed blooms hangs down in a long bolt of cloth, as it once famously did hereabouts, in curtains, tablecloths and even frames as a kind of art. The Marimekko theme sings across potholders, sturdy little birchwood trays, which can be used even as plates, and napkins—all crying, "We're back!" The old-familiars, cheering and bright, known as "evergreen," now have compatible stepchildren designs too, including a sexy, frilly white layered skirt and another decorated with zippers. The women's clothing includes durable striped shirts and cheerfully patterned dresses or, for variety, a slinky grey dress with the familiar design swirling in muted, moody mode. Some dresses have bold graphic patterns in a declarative voice that look great on larger women. A few men's shirts, some cute kids' clothes and (not seen in 1951) chic laptop holders get the treatment as well. The overall look, paradoxically, is ebullient and mannered. Apparently, Jackie—who highlighted Marimekko considerable fame by wearing it—thought so, too.

SMALL PLATES—BIG TASTES

Piattini's varied menu and wine list satisfies the most finicky of palates.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

Just up the street from Park Square, Piattini occupies the space that formerly housed Grillfish. Replicating in part the approach to dining followed at its older sibling on Newbury Street, Piattini, which means "small dishes" in Italian, encourages diners to roam widely over its menu and graze on dishes that are larger than tapas but smaller than entrées.

Piattini's expansive, almost cavernous dining room features a high, black ceiling and large windows opening onto Columbus Avenue. Hanging light fixtures have large cloth shades that radiate gentle light; combined with the glow from tall, frosted glass votive candles, the lighting illuminates brown leather banquettes, hammered-copper tables, dark slate–tiled flooring, and walls hung with rectangular canvas panels in various earth tones. A divider separates the dining room from a long bar that has a television set above each end.

A metal wall sculpture of a waiter serving wine and an extravagant array of bottles on the wall behind the bar proclaim, "You're in a wine bar," while the lengthy wine list (over 40 wines are offered by the glass, and nearly 150 by the bottle) backs up this claim.

And in welcome contrast to the wine prices at too many area restaurants, most of Piattini's wines can be enjoyed without floating a loan, with 80 percent of its bottles priced below $50 and 20 percent at $30 or less. Among the choices I tried, the Valentin Bianchi Elsa ($7.50 a glass), a 2004 cabernet sauvignon–merlot blend from Mendoza, Argentina, showed forward fruit, a full body and good balance, like a fine Bordeaux. Another Argentinean wine, the 2004 Enrique Foster "Ique" ($28), a malbec with assertive tannins, good acidity and lingering flavors, affirmed my predilection for wines from Argentina, which tend to be robust, full-bodied and, thanks to a favorable exchange rate, a good value.

Of course, Piattini's wine list doesn't ignore Italian wines. Poggiotondo's "The Blend" ($30)—composed of sangiovese, merlot and syrah, a combination that often goes by the amusingly presumptuous name "Super-Tuscan"—almost lived up to that appellation, with mouth-filling fruit, a marvelous bouquet and a fine finish. Its label, however, looked like it was meant for a beer bottle.

Over two visits to Piattini, I sampled seven of its small dishes (five hot and two cold), two small pizzas (called pizzette), one pasta and one main course. Bruschetta tre parte ($9) started one meal on the right foot with three varieties of toasted bread: one topped with roasted red peppers and basil, a second with tomatoes and mozzarella and a third with wild mushrooms and goat cheese. Though predictable, the first two versions were tasty and satisfying, while the third player in the trio proved most memorable, with the complex flavors of the wild mushrooms complementing the savory goat cheese. The caprese ($7) captured a touch of summer with slices of fresh, juicy tomatoes and creamy mozzarella, both bathed in good olive oil and enlivened with minty basil.

For hot piattini, we ordered two preparations of calamari: the familiar fritti (squid dusted with flour and fried to a crisp served with a spicy marinara sauce) and the less common puttanesca, from the Italian word for prostitute. Puttanesca preparations celebrate the inventiveness of practitioners of the world's oldest profession who put together meals at the end of a slow week using whatever's left in the fridge. Ye Piattini's puttanesca was anything but ad hoc, consisting of tender ringlets of squid simmered in a provocative stew of cherry tomatoes, capers and gaeta olives, served in a small terra-cotta bowl.

The salsiccia ($9) brought a small casserole of sliced Italian sausage with robust fennel-spiked flavor, grilled to a juicy, tender turn. The sausage shared a small casserole with creamy polenta and well-constructed tomato sauce with roasted peppers. Similarly, the polpette al Barese ($10), little veal meatballs made in the style of Bari (a seaside town on the heel of the Italian boot), yielded moist, flavorful, meaty nuggets swimming in braised escarole and spicy tomato sauce with slightly different accents. The delectable sauces from both the sausage and meatballs made me regret that Piattini doesn't serve better bread for mopping; its rather bland, house-made focaccia just didn't do the trick.

Finally among piattini, the peperoni ripieni ($9) made an extravagant statement. This oversized red bell pepper, roasted and stuffed with sea scallops, spinach and tomatoes, came with a pesto cream sauce that begged for a spoon so I wouldn't miss a drop.

From Piattini's pizza selections, I tried the margherita ($9) and bianca ($10). The margherita, a classic red-sauce pie with roasted garlic, basil and mozzarella, was delicious but so modest in size that it disappeared in a matter of seconds. In contrast, the bianca, which I ordered on an evening while dining alone, seemed twice as big, dressed all in white, with gorgonzola, mozzarella and parmesan cheese, a squeeze of white truffle oil and fresh sage. I ordered the distinctively flavored treat as an appetizer, but it filled me up and sent me home happy.

Choosing from among Piattini's 10 pas- as turned out to be a challenging task. ust reading their descriptions stimulated ny taste buds almost beyond endurance. The ravioli ai funghi ($16), chosen be- ause I'd so enjoyed the third bruschetta, rought mushrooms both inside and out- ide the pasta pillows. And what mush- ooms they were: earthy, woodsy, exotic nd nuanced in flavor. Of Piattini's main ourses, I chose the pollo al tartufo nero $21). This brought a large platter of oneless chicken breasts carefully sautéed o a juicy, tender texture, tossed with wild nushrooms in a black-truffle-oil cream auce and garnished with long fingerling otatoes, asparagus spears and green and ellow peppers, all cooked to a perfect al ente texture. I'm not a fan of boneless hicken breasts, but this preparation left xquisite flavors and aromas lingering on ny taste buds and olfactory nerves long fter it was gone.

Piattini's abbreviated dessert menu of- ered only four choices, but they touched ll the bases of Italian confection. The anna cotta ($7) added blueberries, straw- erries and sliced kiwi to classic vanilla ean custard—smooth, rich and sweet, but not cloying. Chocolata ($8) delivered an intense, hazelnut torta with soft chocolate in the center (the flavors found in Nutella), accompanied by a scoop of hazelnut gelato. And in case any chocoholic should've been left unsatisfied by this combination, the kitchen added a few ladles of intensely fla- vorful chocolate sauce for good measure.

There's much to like about Piattini. Small cards detailing the regions, tasting notes, grape varieties and other interesting facts about each of its wines are supplied as the wine is poured, demonstrating the restaurant's dedication to informing and educating its clientele. There's also a pa- tron-friendly flexibility in the coexistence of small plates, which facilitate sampling a diverse number of its offerings, with full- sized main courses and pastas for more- conventional diners. The restaurant's serv- ing staff was unfailingly observant and attentive, gracious and accommodating, knowledgeable and high-spirited, even when the noise and activity level became most elevated on a Friday evening. This is a fun place to dine, presenting a good, practical option to the more exalted and pricey eateries that surround it near Park Square. iB

A Luscious Legacy

Seasons Restaurant pays homage to the past

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Executive chef Brian Poe of Seasons at the Millennium Bostonian Hotel

If Boston had a Culinary Hall of Fame, no location would be more suitable than Seasons at the Millennium Bostonian Hotel. Consider just a partial listing of the chefs who've cooked there—Jody Adams, Lydia Shire, Jasper White, Susan Regis, Peter McCarthy, Tony Ambrose, Gordon Hamersley—and you'll wonder why the hotel walkway doesn't feature imprints of their clogs alongside well-earned stars. You may also wish for a multicourse dinner that re-creates these chefs' favorite or signature dishes: an edible "greatest hits" collection. Well, that's one wish come true, thanks to hotel general manager John Murtha and Seasons executive chef Brian Poe. From now until the end of the year—and perhaps even into January—the restaurant is offering a Legacy Menu, which includes Jasper's lobster sausage; Jody's duckling with ginger and scallions; Lydia's quail in a toasted brioche box with parsnips and Madeira; and Kilian Wiegand's lemon mousseline. It's a terrific idea, and at $50, a well-priced luxury.

It's also a limited-time offer: Within the next couple of months, "Seasons will cease to be an à la carte dining facility," says Murtha. Instead, the venue will be used for functions. However, "we'll have a new restaurant on the first floor," he adds. Stay tuned.

Three Stars, One Chef, Some Waiting

Here's something worth waiting for: In about a year, Guy Martin, one of only six chefs in Paris to boast three Michelin stars, will open an 80-seat restaurant in the Regent Boston Hotel at Battery Wharf. After 15 years at Restaurant Le Grand Vefour, a Relais & Chateau property, Martin is partnering with Battery Wharf and Regent International to create a showcase for what he describes as "cuisine sans frontières" (food without borders): local products prepared with "unique" international touches. Kind of a vague definition, but there's nothing vague about Martin's credentials, which include induction to the Legion of Honor in March 2003. Finally—a waterfront venue that promises cuisine as spectacular as the view. Also on tap: a bar and lounge, plus a seasonal café along the promenade.

Eighteen and Raring to Go

Not your typical teen makeover: Morton's the Steakhouse has been completely renovated and expanded for the first time since it opened in Boston 18 years ago. There's a new street entrance, a sleek new bar with the requisite menu of "bar bites" and its own new name—Bar 12.21—and an outdoor patio that'll provide more seating once summer returns.

Nibbles

Zon's in Jamaica Plain's Hyde Square has a new head chef. Kevin Williams, most recently at Fenway Park's EMC Club (and sous chef at Zon's back in 2002), is back in the kitchen. He'll add his own stamp to the menu, but fear not: The famous macaroni and cheese will stay the same.... Troquet in the Theatre District is now serving a casual lunch menu on its main floor. It comprises mostly sandwiches, such as a pressed Cubano and barbecue suckling pig with chipotles and caramelized onions on brioche.... Hungry early? Great Bay in the Hotel Commonwealth is once again featuring island tapas for a mere dollar apiece: shrimp tempura, halibut tacos, clam fritters, oysters and more—but only between 5 and 6 o'clock, Monday through Friday. WINE

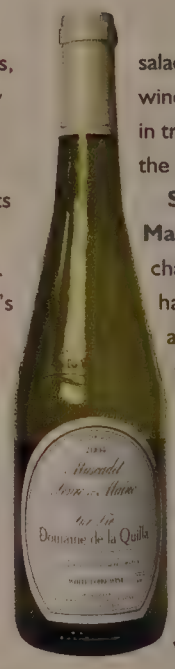
Chardonnay Shake-up

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.



Chardonnay may be old news, but in a market increasingly dominated by red wine, it remains the favorite varietal among American consumers. What accounts for its remarkable popularity and staying power? In a word: versatility. The grape is a chameleon and there's a chardonnay to fit every taste. Adaptable to a wide range of climates and winemaking techniques, chardonnays faithfully reflect this diversity in their flavors and aromas. (And besides its being all things to all imbibers, don't discount the fact that the name rolls off the tongue so easily.)

While growing conditions exert a strong influence on a chardonnay's style, the major difference we can taste relates to the wine's degree of oak contact. Fashions change, and although heavily wooded chardonnay—the familiar kind with lavish vanilla and smoky flavors—remains the gold standard among some consumers, this style is no longer so widely acclaimed. In fact, there's been a massive shift toward more moderately oaky wines, as well as to chardonnays that never even see the inside of a barrel or cask.

The following blind-tasting selections are all standouts at moderate prices, running the full gamut of the chardonnay universe. As usual, they're listed in ascending order of preference.

Jewel Collection "Un-Oaked" Chardonnay, Monterey, 2004 ($11). This wine reflects a welcome trend: The label lets you know exactly how it was made, so you can easily decide between a stainless steel, lighter-style wine or something fuller with a toasty character. (It's a strategy that originated in Australia and New Zealand but is increasingly used in the U.S. and elsewhere.) This California wine actually fooled quite a few of the tasters into thinking it was oak-aged, thanks to its round texture and slightly smoky aroma. The flavors are deliciously understated, with subtle apple and melon notes. It's a great choice for simply prepared seasonal Cape scallops, and an outstanding bargain to boot; barrels are one of the chief expenses in wine making, and the lower production costs here are reflected in the price.

Wishing Tree "Unoaked" Chardonnay, Western Australia, 2005 ($12). This isn't your typical wine from Down Under. Western Australia is relatively cool, and the chardonnays grown there are consequently crisper and better-balanced with natural acidity. Fresh and clean with a pure peach and apple fragrance, this chardonnay has a tangy, lasting finish that makes it an outstanding choice as an aperitif, or with salads and other light fare. It's a good transitional wine for pinot grigio drinkers who are interested in trying chardonnay but have been turned off in the past by heavy oak flavors.

Saint Clair "Unoaked" Chardonnay, Marlborough, 2005 ($14). Yes, they grow chardonnay in New Zealand, too. This one has a full-volume aroma of ripe apples and apricots. It's a bit fuller on the palate than the two preceding chardonnays, with more tart flavor, citric accents and creamier, richer textures. Produced from fruit grown in the premium Upper Wairau, Rapaura and Awatere Valley subzones of Marlborough, it finishes with lingering sweet spices. Suitable for a wide range of fish preparations that incorporate fruit as well as spicy ingredients.

Trevor Jones "Virgin" Chardonnay, South Australia, 2005 ($18). Ever since I first tasted the Trevor Jones in the 2003 vintage, it has been the standard against which I measure other unoaked chardonnays. It has a long history going back to the mid-'80s, when Jones, a maverick winemaker, decided to swim against the tide of heavily oaky, tropically scented Australian chardonnay and crafted a wine that was untouched by wood influence. The yields are lower, as the wine's very concentrated and lush. Peachy and delicate with a smooth mouthfeel (despite firm acidity), this is an unoaked chardonnay with enough substance to stand up to lobster or Alaskan king crab.

Chalone Chardonnay, Monterey, 2005 ($15). Oak isn't necessarily a bad thing, and this wine from one of California's chardonnay experts proves that its judicious use can create something wondrous. It has outstanding balance, with firm fresh acid levels reflecting cool-climate Monterey origins and a richness of texture reflecting low yields. As with all of the above selections, there's no tropical sweetness here—just a lush, fruit-driven, spicy, apple-like flavor with lemon undertones, more about subtlety than power. This is why people like chardonnay. Try it with a seafood casserole.

Lincourt Chardonnay, Santa Barbara, 2004 ($20). In a fuller, more traditionally smoky and buttery style, this South Central Coast chardonnay has ripe, tropical orange and honey scents along with a velvety, rich texture. It was barrel-fermented and aged in a combination of new and used French cooperage. The wood scents are understated, less vanilla and coconut than toasted wheat. Deliciously tangy with a citric edge, this is a full-volume chardonnay you can easily enjoy with grilled fish or chicken. IB

CityScope: Pitching a Fête

Everyone's got their own Christmas traditions. Christians have caroling and tree decoration, Jews have Chinese food and trips to the movies, and Courtney Love has her annual holiday probation violation. Not to be outdone, the French have Le Marché de Noël, and for the second straight winter Boston's take on this fête is set to arrive at the French Library on Marlborough Street. The holiday gift fair features festive products from a mélange of French merchandisers, including La Ligue Francophone, Princesse Tam-Tam, Simplement Blanco and Soleil en Provence, as well as local favorites like Sel de la Terre and Voilà. Along with a solid French shopping experience, the event features steamy beverages like hot cider and mulled wine to keep you riding high on holiday joie de vivre. *The French Library, 53 Marlborough St., Boston (617-912-0400). www.frenchlib.org. 10 am-5 pm. Performing Arts: Dancing for Dianetics

We absolutely refuse to poke fun at Scientology, the alien-based religion that famed academic Tom Cruise and his scholarly celebrity brethren have brought to the forefront in recent years. But that doesn't mean we won't direct you to someone who will: On Nov. 24, Boston Theatre Works presents the local premiere of the 2004 Obie Award–winning musical A Very Merry Unauthorized Children's Scientology Pageant. The show, which runs through Dec. 16 at the BCA's Plaza Theatre, breaks down the actual teachings and belief system of the religion but does so playfully, with a cast of children and against the backdrop of a traditional nativity play. Children portray some of Scientology's most ardent supporters—like the aforementioned Cruise, and Look Who's Talking duo John Travolta and Kirstie Alley—while explaining the somewhat ridiculous life story of L. Ron Hubbard. It's like a look into Cruise's world, without having to take a spaceship. Plaza Theatre, 539 Tremont St., Boston (617-933-8600). www.bostontheatreworks.com. Tue.-Thu., 7:30 pm; Fri. and Sat., 8 pm; Sun., 5 pm. $22-$28. —RL

CityScope: Crafts at the Castle... at the Hynes

Giving great holiday gifts is always a challenge. If only there were like, you know, a mall shaped like a great, big castle that sold nothing but interesting crafts—one-stop shopping minus the generic chain stores. Well, the good news is that Boston's annual Crafts at the Castle festival is back and bigger than ever. The catch? The event's gotten so big that it's outgrown its usual digs at Park Square Castle. On the other hand, the new, bigger venue—the decidedly un-castle-like Hynes Convention Center—only means more artisan-made, museum-quality pieces to choose from during the four-day event, which features a slew of up-and-coming artists and craftsmen. The opening gala and auction on Nov. 30 ($175 per person) give partygoers a chance to peruse the inventory before the rest of the city, with food and drinks served. And it all goes to a good cause, the Family Service of Greater Boston. How's that for giving the best? Hynes Convention Center, 900 Boylston St., Boston (617-523-6400, ext. 5987). www.fsgb.org. $15. —LPK

NOV. 12–MARCH 18, 2007

Museums and Galleries: A Passion for Fashion

Fashion fads may come and go, but we'll always have Paris, the unrivaled mecca for the fabulously clad since at least the 17th century. For fashionistas—or for those in search of a little inspiration for overhauling their tired wardrobes—the must-see show of the season is the Museum of Fine Art's latest exhibition, Fashion Show: Paris Collections 2006. It features designs from the spring couture and fall ready-to-wear collections by some of the most respected names in the biz—Chanel, Christian Dior, Christian Lacroix, Valentino, Yohji Yamamoto, Viktor & Rolf, Hussein Chalayan, Azzedine Alaïa, Rochas and Maison Martin Margiela. Other highlights of the four-month-long show include live fashion shows, lectures and films. And since most of us wouldn't know our ascots from our A-lines without the photographers who bring them to life in the pages of Vogue and Marie Claire, be sure to check out the related exhibition, Fashion Photography, which presents shots by the industry's greatest talents—Edward Steichen, Irving Penn, Richard Avedon and more—over the past hundred years. Très magnifique. Museum of Fine Arts, 465 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-369-3306). www.mfa.org. $23. —LPK

lovies: Blondes, Framed Blondes

fter the events of recent weeks, you might find a few bombshells—like Reese itherspoon, Britney Spears and Anna Nicole Smith—who disagree with the old age that "blondes have more fun." But the stereotype is alive and well at the Brattle heatre with their latest film series. Things kick off on Nov. 24, with a Marilyn onroe double feature: 1953's Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (showtimes at 1, 5:15 and 30 pm), and 1955's Seven Year Itch (3 and 7:15 pm)—the one where Monroe uggles to keep her billowing white skirt at bay. By the time it all winds down at the d of the month, the Brattle will have featured 10 blonde-themed films, including her classics like 1958's Bell, Book & Candle, starring Kim Novak, Jimmy Stewart d Jack Lemmon, and 1933's She Done Him Wrong and I'm No Angel, both of which ar Mae West and Cary Grant. Should be a lot of fun, as long as they don't also have blonde working the projector.... Aw, only kidding, goldie. *Brattle Theatre, 40 Brattle . (617-876-6837). www.brattlefilm.org. Nov. 24-30. Almodóvar's Women Penélope Cruz returns to fine form in Volver.

BY SEAN BURNS

As she's best remembered on these shores for a desultory tour of duty as Tom Cruise's arm candy, plus a few lousy performances in a string of high-profile duds like Vanilla Sky and Captain Corelli's Mandolin, most folks can be forgiven for not knowing a dirty little secret about Penélope Cruz: She's actually a very good actress.

Granted, her English-language performances so far have been stiff and unconvincing, but let's cut her a break here. The fact is that when allowed to speak her native Spanish, as she is in Pedro Almodóvar's warm, welcoming Volver, Cruz is indeed capable of giving rich and wonderful performances, and she's never been better than she is in this picture.

The title translates as "to return," a concept that echoes in several sneaky ways throughout this relaxed, casually complex movie. Once upon a time notorious for madcap provocations such as Tie Me Up! Tie Me Down! and Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown, Almodóvar seems to have mellowed a bit with age. Even his last picture, the jagged, stridently NC-17 Bad Education, was nonetheless suffused with an intriguingly mature sadness.

Lola Dueñas, Yohana Cobo and Penélope Cruz star in Almodóvar's warm new film.

Volver finds Almodóvar returning to the kind of small Spanish village in which he grew up, and to the three-hanky "women's picture" territory he hasn't explored since his 1999 Oscar-winner All About My Mother (which, come to think of it, would've been a perfectly fine title for this movie, if he hadn't already used it.)

Cruz stars as Raimunda, a feisty, stressed-out Madrid mom who has had it with her drunken, layabout husband (Antonio de la Torre) and her sullen, cell-phone-happy teenage daughter (Yohana Cobo.) She's worked hard to escape her provincial, small-town past, and we can see Raimunda's hard resentment bleeding through a chipper façade during dutiful family visits to her senile Aunt Paula (Chus Lampreave) and childhood friend Agustina (a touching Blanca Portillo).

As par for the course in any Almodóvar film, the plot doesn't take very long to spin out of control and into a bit of a twisted homage to both Spanish telenovelas and Douglas Sirk melodramas. It'd take the better part of a day to explain exactly why Raimunda winds up "borrowing" her neighbor's bistro to feed a local film crew, and even longer to tell how that shiftless husband of hers ended up in the restaurant's meat locker with a knife in his belly. Volver is chock full of constantly shifting family allegiances, secrets and surprises, the most prominent of which is the sudden reappearance of Raimunda's neglectful mother (Carmen Maura), who died three years ago in a fire.

Volver's biggest plot bombshell is also the easiest to guess, long before the rest of the characters catch on, but the messy revelations feel like a secondary concern to Almodóvar. The movie is surprisingly easygoing about its screwball twists, grounding the bizarre turns in a matter-of-fact fashion and remaining focused mostly on the character interactions and good-natured lowbrow humor. (Maura might be playing the first ghost in movie history that breaks wind.)

But what you'll be most struck by is this filmmaker's sheer, unabashed adoration of women. The movie's texture has such a rich, feminine glow to it. Almost all the scenes take place while these women are preparing food, styling each other's hair or somehow nurturing one another. There's something striking and perhaps primal about Almodóvar's vision of these females as healers and caregivers—their community's life force. Take a close look at his genuinely appreciative attention to the most minute details of their cooking, cleaning and other such activities that we aren't typically allowed to associate with feminist films.

Almodóvar has also padded out Cruz's costumes with the kind of curves you've never seen before on her beanstalk body. At times looking eerily like a young Sophia Loren, she radiates a sort of earth-mother sexuality, and the camera can't help but showcase her ample bosom so often that the fellow sitting next to me admitted afterwards he had trouble remembering to look down and read the subtitles.

Like Volver's occasional bits of ribald humor, its hearty admiration of the female form miraculously doesn't come off as remotely prurient. Though a bit overplotted and overlong, Volver is a very sweet film—a love letter to the kindness and resilience of women everywhere. iB

Babel ★★½
Brilliantly assembled, strikingly well-acted and, a awhile, just about impossible to take seriously, latest collaboration between director Alejan González Iñárritu and screenwriter Guillermo riaga is an exquisitely crafted exercise in audie abuse that grows more outlandish and tiresome w each passing reel. Like their previous films, Am Perros and 21 Grams, Babel takes three seemir unrelated stories and slowly reveals hidden conn tions between these strangers united in tragedy. T relentlessly downbeat meditation on misfort stars Brad Pitt and Cate Blanchett as a disas prone American couple on vacation in Moroc with loosely related tales of woe rippling across globe in the wake of their unhappiness. Iñárritu tremendously gifted visual stylist, and the aston ing segment about a depressed deaf-mute teen girl (Rinko Kikuchi) living in Japan stands as sc of this year's most powerful and evocative filmm ing. But Babel never knows when to say when. riaga's script just keeps piling calamities on to catastrophes until the film eventually becomes m numbing than affecting. A little levity, or even a of restraint, would've gone a long way. (At Ken Square and in the suburbs.)

Bobby ★½
If the words "written and directed by Emilio tevez" don't already inspire enough derisive chu les, the absurdly celebrity-stuffed cast list will c the deal. Chronicling all sorts of banal events at Ambassador hotel on June 6, 1968, Estevez sh horns seemingly every last one of his famous frie into a bustling, largely pointless soap opera tak place in the hours before RFK's assassination. Hil ous in part because of its pleadingly sincere to this very shallow and silly film has almost nothin do with the title character and everything to with washed-up, former movie stars grasping comeback straws. Watch Christian Slater b racist! Then Sharon Stone cries. Then Helen H cries. Then Heather Graham cries. Then Jos Jackson cries. Then Lindsay Lohan cries. Then A thony Hopkins stands around in the lobby mu bling. Your own mileage may vary, but my perso low-point came during drunken lounge-singer D Moore's slurry torch-ballad rendition of "Lo Louie." Borat: Cultural Learnings of Ameri for Make Benefit Glorious Nation o Kazakhstan ★★★★
A years-in-the-making, monstrously hilarious, ta no-prisoners extravaganza that boasts at least ha dozen sequences that must be seen to be believ this original and outrageous comedy follows go cult performer Sacha Baron Cohen in the funn of his many sidesplitting guises: Kazakh repo Borat Sagdiyev. Shot guerrilla-style, the bette ensnare unsuspecting participants, the film obse cuddly, gregarious Borat cluelessly blurting out manner of racist, sexist, homophobic filth, elicit some surprisingly disturbing responses from the erage Americans he meets on the street. You'd amazed what some people let slip when they th they're talking to a simpleton. Cohen's uniqu subversive brand of comedy is both purposeful pointed: He blows the lid off secret bigotries in o to air them out as rancid stupidity. Whittled do from a mountain of footage into a breathlessly pa locomotive under the expert supervision of direc Larry Charles, there's no piety left unweaked prejudice left unexposed over the course of these riotous minutes. I dearly look forward to rep viewings, just so I can watch it without havin pick my jaw up off the floor at every turn. Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Dixie Chicks: Shut Up & Sing ★★★
This candid, surprisingly moving documentary f directors Barbara Kopple and Cecilia Peck be with the hugely successful country music trio's p lic relations disaster back in 2003, when lead sin Natalie Maines made an offhand, uncharitable c ment about George W. Bush at a London conc and inadvertently ignited a political firestorm good deal more thoughtful and considered than might expect from the cloddish advertising c paign, the film explores some unsettling issue mass media consolidation and manipulation, an refreshingly blunt about the carefully researched get-marketing and branding strategies that are quired to be successful in the entertainment indu

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

today. The picture is also an intimate portrait of the Chicks themselves, with plenty of behind-the-scenes footage of Maines, Martie Maguire and Emily Robison coping with their new national pariah status. Banned from country radio, labeled "Saddam's Angels" during an amusing public feud with Toby Keith, and performing in spite of a seriously scary Dallas death threat, these three remarkable women stick together, stick to their guns and, for all intents and purposes, start their careers over from scratch. Shut Up & Sing is an inspiring, genuinely patriotic story. (At Kendall Square.)

Fast Food Nation ★★★

Writer-director Richard Linklater has teamed up with Eric Schlosser for a loose-limbed, big-screen adaptation of the latter's 2001 non-fiction best-seller. The result is a curious, not-unsatisfying hybrid; a mix of statistics, editorializing and slightly sketchy drama trying valiantly to cover a massive cross-section of American culture by zeroing in on a Colorado town that's kept afloat by countless franchise joints and one ominous meatpacking plant. Dispatched to investigate an overabundance of feces in his chain's burgers, Greg Kinnear's marketing honcho sits down with folks representing every interest along the fast food chain. This is a slender dramatic thread, but it offers just enough thrust for Slacker and Before Sunset director Linklater to do what he's best at: collecting a series of wide-ranging, philosophical discussions. The storyline drifts at times, but it's ultimately anchored by fine performances from Catalina Sandino Moreno, Ashley Johnson, and a show-stopping cameo from Bruce Willis. Criticized in some quarters for being less incendiary than Schlosser's book, Fast Food Nation is not so much a diatribe as it is a conversation, and it's one well worth having. (At Harvard Square.)

Fur: An Imaginary Portrait of Diane Arbus ★½

Don't expect to learn much about the famed photographer in this off-kilter, lethally dull pseudo-biopic from director Steven Shainberg. A glacially paced fairy tale that feels more like sophomoric fan-fiction than any serious investigation of an artist's development, Fur focuses on the years before Arbus picked up a camera, with Nicole Kidman playing the lenser as a fragile, desperate housewife falling hard for a hairy man living in the apartmer upstairs. Robert Downey Jr. dons some laughab feeble makeup as the cultured, princely neighbo who just happens to be covered from head to t with fur. Shainberg's visual scheme constantly re erences Jean Cocteau's Beauty and the Beast, b sadly Downey looks a lot more like Chewbacc Erin Cressida Wilson's simplistic screenplay asks to believe that Arbus' walk on the wild side wi her fuzzy neighbor, plus a few cocktail parties wi assorted circus freaks, are all it takes to become o of the most original and influential photographe of the 20th century. Boasting uncharacteristical lifeless performances from the two leads, Fur tak its cuckoo concept dreadfully seriously. (At Ke dall Square.)

A Good Year ★½

Russell Crowe reteams with his Gladiator director F dley Scott for this leaden attempt at a frothy, upbe comedy. As Crowe and Scott are probably the la two people in movies who come to mind when he ing the words "frothy" and "upbeat," watching t film is sort of like listening to a "knock-knock joke" told by a mortician. Wearing oversized glasses a constantly tripping over props, Crowe tries to comb his natural, sullen gravity by throwing himself ir exquisitely painful attempts at physical comedy. Pl ing a hotshot London bond trader who inherits a r down Provence winery, our hero suffers through o of those "only-in-Hollywood" epiphanies—wherei callow young success must learn that what's really i portant in life is "stopping to smell the roses." T film's single-minded preachiness might be offensive folks who actually have to work for a living. Scott l no flair for comedy direction, eventually falling b on doo-doo jokes and undercranked fast-motion, Benny Hill. (At Boston Common, Fenway, W Newton and in the suburbs.)

happy housewife and Patrick Wilson's handsome, henpecked stay-at-home dad. Director Todd Field (who cowrote the screenplay with Perrotta) was mentored by the late Stanley Kubrick, and here he emulates the master's stylized, hermetically chilly, God's-eye perspective—complete with a sardonic, third-person narration straight out of 1975's Barry Lyndon. But every time the picture begins to feel a bit too pleased with itself, these actors find a moment of truth so stark and uncomfortable, you'll be grateful for the camera's respectful distance. Former Bad News Bear Jackie Earle Haley brings both terror and pathos to the role of a sex offender paroled into a town full of overprotective moms and emasculated dads, searching for a scapegoat. This overambitious movie sometimes bites a bit too big for its britches, but Winslet bravely plumbs the depths of selfishness and sadness, exposing messy, unspoken emotions that are all too human. Opens Oct. 20 at Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall and in the suburbs.)

Man of the Year ★★

It sounds like a foolproof premise: Robin Williams stars as the host of a popular late-night political comedy show (any resemblance to Jon Stewart or Bill Maher is entirely intentional) who's drafted in a grassroots movement to run as a third-party candidate for President of the United States. Much to the surprise and delight of his gag-writing entourage (which includes a lively Christopher Walken and the loud-mouthed Daily Show correspondent Lewis Black), the dim, trash-talking comic improbably wins the election. It's a scenario ripe for satire, but writer-director Barry Levinson has surprisingly little on his mind when it comes time to skewer the eroding line between politics and entertainment. Man of the Year almost immediately devolves into a half-baked thriller, starring Laura Linney as a whistle-blower on the run. Nefarious computer executives behind the nation's faulty electronic voting machines are trying to muff her out, and any chance for topical observation takes a backseat to uninspired chase sequences. Williams obviously improvised the majority of his pump speeches, and he hits about 50/50—as usual, more impressive for his speed than his accuracy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Marie Antoinette ★★½

The soundtrack blasting 1980s New Wave pop tunes is not the first of many hints that writer-director Sofia Coppola doesn't have much interest in making your standard-issue biography of France's most notorious queen. A dreamy, often very funny mood-piece from a skeptical-yet-sympathetic point of view, Coppola's featherlong opus is an occasionally exhilarating rush of extravagantry, elaborate fashions and oddball customs lost in translation. Kirsten Dunst's deliberately contemporary valley-girl affectations clang against the pomp and circumstance of Versailles, marking her as a stranger in a strange land. Shot in muted light with thoroughly modern handheld affectations by cinematographer Lance Acord, the filmmaking is a lot punkier and sprightlier than any Merchant/Ivory period piece. Coppola's decision to stock the cast with second-generation Hollywood royalty (including her cousin Jason Schwartzman, Danny Huston and Asia Argento) suggests she's trying to convey something deeply personal about coming of age under a privileged microscope, but life inside this bubble is a bit too narrowly conceived to hold up for the entire distended running time—especially when the Revolution comes calling in the second hour. (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

The Prestige ★★★½

"Are you watching closely?" is the question asked most often throughout this dense, fiendishly entertaining puzzle-box from Batman Begins director Christopher Nolan. You'd better be. An antidote of sorts to the cheating gimcrackery of this fall's soggy surprise hit, The Illusionist, Nolan's inordinately superior zinger tells of a lifelong, violent competition between two turn-of-the-century London magicians, strikingly well played by Christian Bale and Hugh Jackman. The film's dank, blood-flecked atmosphere is rich and gritty, while its innovative, time-tripping structural gambles pay off in enough sinister jolts to power at least three lesser pictures. Based on a novel by Christopher Priest, the screenplay (penned by the director and his brother Jonathan) digs deep into issues of duality and obsession, meticulously setting up revelations that drop like dominoes in the climactic moments. Not only is this a rare "twist-movie" that actually plays fair with the audience, but it also becomes richer and more rewarding once you've put all the pieces together. Top hats off to a droll supporting turn by David Bowie as inventor Nikola Tesla, whose rivalry with Thomas Edison provides yet another of The Prestige's twisted thematic mirrors. Bravo. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Queen ★★★

A good deal more amusing and sympathetic than you might expect, director Stephen Frears' catty, behind-closed-doors saga of royal protocol in the wake of Princess Diana's death boasts an impeccably precise performance by Helen Mirren, a model of restraint and understatement. As HRM Elizabeth II, Mirren is the embodiment of stiff-upper-lip British reserve, allowing us only fleeting glimpses of her inner turmoil while the monarchy is rocked by public outrage during that weird week of hysterical, worldwide grieving. Michael Sheen does a fine job as Prime Minister "Call Me Tony" Blair, attempting to usher in an era of "regular guy" modernity and correctly gauging that Her Majesty's private, dignified responses will simply not cut the mustard in such sad, unprecedented circumstances. Peter Morgan's screenplay sneaks questions about tradition, obsolescence and celebrity worship in between the very funny lines, and James Cromwell steals the show with an unfiltered take on Prince Philip. The Queen stumbles over some unfortunate symbolism involving a 14-point stag on the grounds of Balmoral, but Mirren's sterling self-control saves even the soppiest scenes. My goodness, the things this lady can convey with a single eyebrow! (At Coolidge Corner, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Shortbus ★★★★

Although already notorious on the festival circuit for its no-holds-barred approach to onscreen sex scenes (and yes, they are indeed as graphic and unsimulated as anything you'll see in any porn flick), writer-director John Cameron Mitchell's warm, wondrous Shortbus is hardly a scummy object of titillation for the raincoat crowd. It's instead a funny, randy, absolutely delightful romantic comedy set in a New York City still staggering under the long shadow of 9/11. Sook-Yin Lee leads a cast of brave, boldly exposed newcomers, each sorting through messy relationship entanglements and converging on the afterhours club from which the movie takes its title. Gay, straight, fat, skinny, old, young, ugly and beautiful—all are welcome, and all are embraced by the movie's boundless generosity and compassion. It's no accident that the picture begins with a closeup on the Statue of Liberty, as Mitchell positions sexual freedom and exploration as our inalienable rights. (There's a rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner" that must be seen to be believed.) More revolutionary than the boundary-pushing hardcore content is Shortbus' joyful exuberance and empathy. The biggest organ on display here is the movie's heart. (At Kendall Square.)

Stranger Than Fiction ★

Proving once again that there's no craze Hollywood can't co-opt and dumb down, those wildly successful brain-bending metamovies of screenwriter Charlie Kaufman have been lobotomized for mass consumption with Stranger Than Fiction. Za Helm's script is a riff on Kaufman's Adaptation, configured for a fourth-grade reading level. W Ferrell stars as a miserable IRS auditor sleepwa ing through life, until one day when he hears voice of an omniscient narrator (Emma Thor son) foreshadowing his imminent demise. Tu out Ferrell is just another character in bloc novelist Thompson's latest tome, and the film lows his attempts to find the reclusive author plead for his life. How Ferrell ended up inhabit the same universe as his creator is just one of m tricky questions never addressed, as the movie is more interested in a routine, unlikely love story tween stuffy Ferrell and Maggie Gyllenhaal's ar chist bakery owner. Tamping down his ma comic energy until there's nothing left on scre Ferrell barely registers as the put-upon hero. Di tor Marc Forster makes every wrong decision in inable, giving the movie a sparse, ugly look ar listless pace. (At Boston Common, Fenway an the suburbs.)

The U.S. vs. John Lennon ★★

More like "The Gospel According to Yoko O This infuriatingly incomplete, rose-tinted do mentary purports to expose the Nixon adminis tion's pernicious harassment campaign against former Beatle. But it's really just another laye polish for the official version of the Lennon m burnished every few years by Ono and associate boost record sales and further canonize Saint J as the only public figure of note in the entiret the 1960s. The film's selective memory dubio posits "Revolution" as the first pop protest s willfully ignoring the dozens of other artists were taking their own stands long before Len You also won't hear the words "Paul McCartne "George Harrison" mentioned once in this en movie, and you'd have to be crazy to think th bring up the wife and child John abandoned to off with Yoko. Directors David Leaf and John S infeld fashion this collage of fun archival foo and terrific songs into a VH-1 friendly format their blinkered choices blow Lennon's prank heartfelt anti-war protests all out of proport doing a disservice to others in the movement. Growing Season

The Dresden Dolls feed their theatrical roots in The Onion Cellar.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Suppose you're the Dresden Dolls. How do you cap another whirlwind year that included a new CD, relentless touring from England to Australia, a YouTube buzz video with pop-punksters Panic! at the Disco, and a Boston Music Award for Act of the Year?

Grab the opportunity to return home to a more intimate venue (recalling the lofts and lounges where your punk-cabaret duo was born), and push your theatrical sensibility to another level. That's what singer-pianist Amanda Palmer is plotting in The Onion Cellar—a month-long American Repertory Theatre production that opens Dec. 9 at the Zero Arrow Theatre—and a Nov. 27 solo show at the Paradise.

The Dresden Dolls return home after a world tour and a CD release.

In The Onion Cellar, Palmer and drummer Brian Viglione play the house band at a fictional cabaret inspired by a chapter in Gunter Grass' The Tin Drum in which the protagonist discovers a nightclub where people peel onions and weep.

"In a way, we're opening a nightclub for 40 nights," says Palmer, who expects the Dolls to play a "totally mixed bag" of old and new songs, from fan favorites and obscurities to material written just for the show. "I don't want to tread completely into new territory. Especially with the ART's built-in audience, we're going to be playing for a lot of people who've never seen us, or even heard of us."

The band will perform almost continuously in and out of the spotlight, in a cabaret-style room with tables and stools by the bar. "I want people to feel as if they're at a regular Dresden Dolls show," she says, "but superenhanced."

The enhancement comes from ART actors, designers and writers—collaborators whom Palmer likens to a fantasy version of the Brigade, the shifting group of performance artists that the Dolls invite to spice up their concerts.

"Instead of a cobbled-together mix of amateur and hired performers who are literally flying offstage, unintegrated because that's the way touring basically demands that you work, we actually get to inhabit and grow into the space."

The show's narrative action will be propelled by a script that's still in the works. But Palmer says, "The theater that I've created and that turns me on has never been straight 'play' theater with dialogue and narrative. I've always been more interested in images and, as the [Onion Cellar] director Marcus Stern so beautifully puts it, 'fractional moments.'"

Some of those might grow from "onion moments" of real joy or pain, expressed in actual letters solicited from the public for posting on an Onion Cellar billboard. "Anyone coming to the show totally unprepared might wonder who's actually involved," Palmer says. "I like to keep our fans as involved and engaged as possible."

Fans and band alike should revel in such a personal setting for the Dolls' dynamic songs to breathe. "Nobody is going to be more than 30 feet from the band," she says. "As exciting as it is to play for 1,000 or 2,000 people at a time, you start missing the connection. You start missing the ability to see every single person's face."

Harvard Square's 300-seat Zero Arrow Theatre is half the size of the Paradise, where Palmer is playing a rare solo gig, a ballad-oriented outlet for songs that don't need drums. "I'm turning my attention to recording a lot of that material this spring," she says. "I booked [that date] on purpose to make sure I didn't slow down too much and get rusty. The nice thing about solo shows is there's almost no work involved. I show up with a keyboard."

Palmer was playing solo at a party in 2000 when she met musical soul mate Viglione, whose drumming complements her piano with jazz/hardcore fury and finesse. "He was the perfect intuitive drummer," she says. "He knew exactly how to fill in the gaps of songs and create a rhythmic fit."

Even in making Yes, Virginia, their second album (but first on a label), they opted to play live with few guests and overdubs, facing each other in the studio. "It's a strength and it's an asset, because we really lock in with each other live," Palmer says. "That's where the magic happens."

One of the Dolls' few missteps this year was a tour with Panic! at the Disco, whose young teen fans didn't dig the alt-cabaret openers. Nonetheless, the two bands played off the controversy by making a campy video for the Dolls' "Backstabber" in which the bands try to kill each other.

"Kids need an opportunity to be expressive and free instead of being dictated by what's sold at the alternative store at the mall," Palmer says. "It's gotten very confusing for kids to know what authenticity really means."

And what does authenticity mean for the Dolls? "Just do what you want, and follow your initial creative impulses." iB

rockie horoscope

SAGITTARIUS

(NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21)

Maybe you'll be hanging new curtains in time for Christmas; maybe you're due for a confrontation with the weirdest of the relatives. However "make-it-nice" Venus in your sign handles its challenging square to Uranus, during the next two weeks you could be more than willing to break with custom to get what you want. For a sentimental Centaur, taking a step out of the ordinary can be a big thing. Rest assured that what you sensed on Nov. 21, when your Jupiter ruler and the sun merged, is the way to go.

CAPRICORN

(DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 2

Although Mercury is no longer retrograde, it's not moving forward fast enough to help you slip through the traffic jams and airport delays that seem to get worse every Thanksgiving. Resign yourself to dealing with scheduling revisions while unpredictable Uranus runs riot through your zone of transportation and communication. However, petty annoyances are just that; better to gird up for the aggravation engineered by a mean-spirited acquaintance hell-bent on smearing either your or your family's reputation.

AQUARIUS

(JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18)

Assuming the best, passing on the rest? While the extremely fortunate conjunction of the sun and prosperous Jupiter at the top of your solar chart could bring well-deserved opportunities and rewards, it can also encourage you to spend way beyond your means, to stretch your resources too thin. Since idealistic Neptune in your sign is encouraging you to believe what you want to believe or to paint a much prettier picture, you might be oblivious to the test a significant relationship is going through. Wake up.

PISCES

(FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19)

Be sure you follow up on the Scorpio new moon energy to add juice to one of your life-long goals. If that goal includes a slow boat ride through China or a photo safari in Africa, so much the better, as long as it takes you far from your ordinary existence. No matter how you intend to expand your life experience or when you want to get started, it's important to realize that there's a propitious time to take steps and an inappropriate time. Now, before the full moon on the 4th, is one of those opportune times.

ARIES

(MARCH 20-APRIL 19)

The heavy atmosphere that has surrounded you will lighten up considerably thanks to a recent infusion of Sagittarian optimism and a sense of adventure that is not unlike the Ram's. And, because expansive Jupiter will be in that friendly fire sign for the next 12 months, it's fairly safe to assume (no promises though) that your horizons will widen considerably. However, until your Mars ruler leaves subversive Scorpio on Dec. 5, there might be one more river to cross, another responsibility to discharge or another debt to pay.

TAURUS

(APRIL 20-MAY 20)

Your reliance on significant others, be they business partners, attorneys or best buddies, starts to ebb as five personal planets cross the border between Scorpio and Sagittarius. It's on that critical cusp that the immensely fortunate merger of the sun and gigantic Jupiter took place on Nov. 21. If you were born in mid-May or have natal planets at the tail end of Taurus, be sure to jump on any opportunity for economic growth, greater wisdom and improved health that comes your way around that date, no matter who offers it.

GEMINI

(MAY 21-JUNE 20)

Plans you made during the past four weeks while your Mercury ruler was retrograde may have to be revised now that the little guy is moving forward, albeit quite slowly. Although covering the same old ground can be annoying, or worse, tedious, it does allow you the time and space to catch errors and correct misunderstandings that've occurred along the way. With the arrival of solar Sagittarius, there'll be exciting interactions with your significant others as well as the folks you can't put up with much longer.

CANCER

(JUNE 21-JULY 22)

Whether you believe in the efficacy of new moon magic or think it's a load of hooey, a needy Moon Child shouldn't have allowed that crucial event to slip by without some sort of observance. Because the Scorpio new moon took place in your house of romance, creative projects, children and other risky ventures, it's not too late to initiate an entirely new cycle in any or all of these areas. And, most importantly, protective, prosperous Jupiter adds its blessing to whatever you put out there.

LEO

(JULY 23-AUGUST 22)

You could be in for a tumultuous time as your sun ruler makes the trip from the murky depths of Scorpio to the giddy heights of Sagittarian exuberance. If you don't want a bumpy ride, stay focused on the household and family issues that really matter, rather than who is bringing what to the Thanksgiving table. Every sign has to deal with relatives (or the lack thereof) this time of year, but kind-hearted Lions are facing an uncommon buildup of planetary power in the womb to tomb zone right now. Once the holiday is history, things lighten up considerably.

VIRGO

(AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22)

Read for Gemini for the inside scoop on how to proceed. Now that both your and their Mercury ruler is facing forward, take time figuring out what to buy, sell or trade next. There's no rush and plenty of new information you need to gather before reaching a final, well-considered decision. While a business partner might not be putting you under pressure (leave that to a family member), you could be in for a big surprise as independent Uranus in your Pisces house of allies turns direct. Try to keep the lines of communication open and static-free.

LIBRA

(SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22)

Since most of the personal planets are holding court in your Scorpio house of income and assets, figuring out what your next financial decision should be, your Venus ruler in playful Sagittarius is tempted to upset whatever applecart you've been feeding off. Her surprise is scheduled for Thanksgiving weekend, so rather than succumb to turkey-induced torpor, try staying alert to the variety of recreational activities that will be paraded in front of you. A change of heart might be one; a change of venue another.

SCORPIO

(OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21)

Even though magnetic Venus, the life-sustaining sun and generous Jupiter have just left Scorpio, the attention you've been getting is far from over. Mercury is still weaving an intricate, informative path through your sign, plus your energetic Mars coruler continues to increase your strength and resiliency until the new moon that kicked in on Nov. 2 becomes full. At the moment, you can benefit tremendously from the vision of the future you recently had when the sun and prophetic Jupiter met in your sign.

Less Is More

To the person who complained about the "whorish" Halloween costumes in the last issue: Speak for yourself, homo. Stay home and let your mommy tuck you in if you don't like what the girls are wearing on Halloween. This great night comes but once a year, and I for one love seeing how little the beautiful women of this town will attempt to wear. Big, small, thick, thin, curvy, whatever—they've all got something to show, and I've got two eyes that love seeing them. To all the slutty devils, nurses, and yes, even Raggedy Anns out there, I hope you had a great Halloween. I know I did.
—Wide Eyed

Ruff Going

To the douchebag dog owner in Dana Street Park: Perhaps you remember me. I was taking care of Jefe, the lab–husky mix that so fascinated your designer Shih Tzu–Bichon puppy. When I noticed the interest your precocious bundle of fluff had expressed in my dog, I warned you that Jefe sometimes doesn't know his own strength. I took him to a different part of the park, and distracted him whenever your dog started coming our way. While I didn't want a medal, I did hope that you would respect the boundaries that I put forth. Instead, you gossiped with your friends and talked on your cell phone, allowing your dog to run all over the place on her retractable leash. For you to turn to your friends and loudly call my dog a "maniac" as I left the park was a slap in the face, to which I can only respond: F--- you! You're more of a bitch than your dog.
—The Nanny

Stranger in the Night

You: A tall tan man with a beige suede jacket. Me: A petite young lady with tanned skin, a purple shirt and black pants. On the night of Nov. 10, we were both in front of the Tufts New England Medical Center ER entrance. I told you the story of my crazy night. My friends ditched me, I lost my car, and on top of it all, my phone got shut off that night. You were so kind. I was crying hysterically because I was so scared and had no means of communication and you let me use your cell phone to call my brother. You even put your jacket on me while we waited for him to come pick me up, and you refused to let me sit outside alone. I was so moved by your kindness to a complete stranger. I'm not sure I said thank you that night. E-mail me, so we can meet up for a drink. I owe you one.

Waiter a Minute

Don't get me wrong. I like Sonsie. It's got great people-watching tables and good pizza. I've been dining and drinking there for 10 years. I've worked across the street for seven of those years and I used to spend every Saturday night sitting at the bar, sipping Cosmos with my coworkers. But I went in the other night with a friend, and had a not-so-good waiter. He spilled my drink all over the table and didn't blink. He made no attempt to wipe it up. He ignored us for the remainder of the meal and he added a 20 percent tip to our bill, even though I left him nothing on purpose. I actually made a line through the tip area on the credit card slip. My friend paid the majority of the bill and added the entire gratuity there. What gave this horrible waiter the right to just add 20 percent to my bill, when clearly I didn't approve of this? Long story short—dine at Sonsie, drink at Sonsie, but watch out for this waiter!
—The Victim

Forgive and Forget?

I'm sincerely sorry. I know things aren't right between us now, but I hope our future as a family will be better. Happy holidays and happy 35th birthday.
—Your Brother, David

Misery Loves Company

Fellow housemate: Why oh why are you so miserable? Your life is rather pathetic. And you aren't the kindest of souls. You seem lonely, too. But is it that difficult to put a smile on your face and be nice to people? Try it, you might like it.
—An Observer

Holla Back Girls

To all the beautiful Boston ladies: I'd like to say thank you for responding to my note in the IMPROPER a few months ago. I've received 12 letters so far—people of all sorts. Thanks for showing me some love, even though I'm incarcerated. But one thing, please no more ladies over the age of 40. I'm young—20 years old. So, for those who are my age, write me. I'm always looking for a friendship.

Gratitude for the Token

To the kind woman who helped me at the Arlington T stop on the Green Line on Nov. 9: I can't thank you enough. You heard the grumpy man behind the kiosk say, "It looks like ya walking," when he couldn't make change for me, and then you gave me one of your tokens. I would have been late for a very important appointment if it wasn't for you. It's acts of kindness like this that make for very good karma. It's rare in these parts. Thanks.
—Indebted

You Stink!

To the clueless mother at Carberry's in Arlington on Nov. 11: I'm very happy that you're officially part of the circle of life, producing a beautiful bouncing baby; however, there are a few things that you must've missed in the 2006 edition of Mothering for Dummies. First, some child-friendly coffee shops have smaller tables for children to eat at. These tables, located in close proximity to the "grown-up" tables, are in no way a place for you to change your baby's stinky diaper. The last thing anyone wants to experience while eating a sandwich or a scone is a baby's private parts and smelly baby-butt explosion. Taking my own personal issues out of it, this is a table for small children to eat food off of, and you didn't even wipe it down afterwards! Go into the bathroom. There's a changing table; there's a sink! But I beg of you, change that thing anywhere but in front of people who paid to eat there. I hope you and your husband can sleep at night, knowing your baby's butt in my eating space haunts my nightmares. Sicko.
—Dining in Disgust

Poo on You

To the guy or girl in Charlestown who thought it'd be all right to leave a steamy pile of their dog's poo on the sidewalk: Thanks a lot, those were my favorite sneakers. But guess what? Now they're in the trash. Which is what you are—a lazy piece of trash. I can only hope that your sweet little pooch leaves a fresh deposit in your pillow case tonight.
—Shoeless Joe

Let's Get Physical

Attention Italia fan who frequents the Central Square Boston Sports Club: I've seen you at the gym for a few months now. You: very fond of the cardio machines. Me: tallish, small-framed brunette who often wears a very colorful headband. I saw you one day three weeks ago on Newbury Street and we made eye contact. I'd like to come over and say hi, but I'm too shy and don't want to interrupt your routine. I hope our paths eventually cross. If they do, I'd like to get a drink in the neighborhood one night.

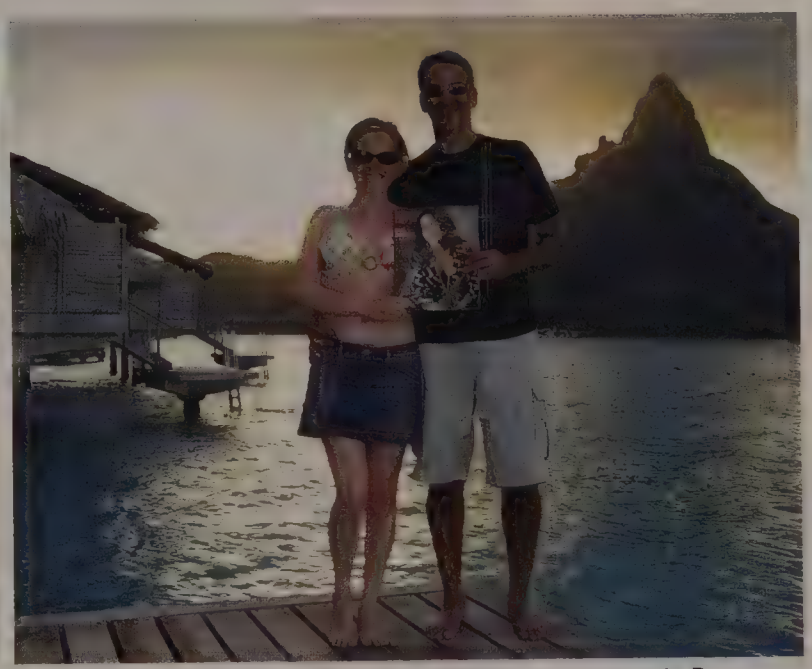
IMPROPER sightings

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Life is apparently double-good for Charles and Christopher Talanian in Great Exuma, Bahamas.



Julie Nashawaty and Greg Clancy took this shot at sunset in Bora Bora, Tahiti. We don't know if they made it home that night, but they could've swum under a Tahitian moon.

The Radio City Rockettes took a break from rehearsals in Myrtle Beach, S.C., to pose with THE IMPROPER and likely sweat profusely in their winter hats and wool dresses.

Janice Wang traveled to China's Forbidden Palace, which we think is different from the Forbidden Palace featured on Cinemax every other night.

Tien Le checked out the Great Wall of China while atop the Big-Ass Camel of China. The blanket is part of Ralph Lauren's "Wait, You Want Me To Design A Blanket For A 900-Pound Camel? You've Got To Be Kidding Me!" line.

Scott Grigelevich and Marius Gallitano visited either Hong Kong's Tian Tan Buddha or a life-size sculpture of Queen Latifah. We're not sure.

ARS LONGA, PARTY BREVIS...

Sotheby's and Christie's have nuthin' on the AIDS Action Committee, which hosted its biannual Artcetera auction at the Cyclorama and once again proved that bidding for art provides a highly amusing backdrop for socializing.

Among the superglittery crowd were interior designer Michael Barnum, Back Bay nabobs Lois and Steve Kunian, Channel 5 stud muffin David Brown, art collectors Ron and Ronni Casti, incorrigible scamp Geoff Hargadon, bons vivants Philip Lovejoy and Jim Moses, and one woman who'd recently broken off a wedding engagement and said, "I sold the ring, bought a handbag and went to Europe for a week."

However, the evening's funniest remark came from the guest who said, "Anything's possible with the liberal application of alcohol."

WHEN THE SAINTS COME MARCHING IN...

You don't normally think of Symphony Hall and Bourbon Street in the same breath, but a bit of the Big Easy came to Boston when the Bank of America Celebrity Series hosted the Preservation Hall Jazz Band.

The event attracted the likes of cochairs Caroline Collings and her daughter-in-law, Caroline Collings (both blonde, beautiful and chic beyond belief), hotelier Roger Saunders and the glamorous Norma, supernova Estrellita Karsh (widow of famed portrait photographer Yusuf), music boosters Bunni and Jerry Roberts, thoroughbred Sylvia Pope, Talbots CEO Arnold Zetcher and the very fabulous Ellen, banking babe Dora Lewin and her pianist husband, Michael, and a whole lot of kids, which prompted one guest to say, "I wonder if they were dragged here or someone told them Hilary Duff was performing."

The concert had guests dancing in the aisles and up on stage, and it was followed by a Cajun feast where the comments overheard included, "You have all those beads. You must've been a naughty girl!" and "If you ever die, I know of a great mortician in Portsmouth."

SAKS IN THE CITY...

Parties at department stores tend to be dreary affairs, but Saks Fifth Avenue unveiled its luxury-liner-like new floor with a benefit for four of our favorite causes: Boston Ballet, Dana-Farber, the Crohn's and Colitis Foundation and the Max Warburg Courage Curriculum.

Accordingly, everyone who's anyone was there, by which we mean silver fox Pamela Humphrey, the lovely Stephanie Warburg, ex-senatorial spouse Joan Kennedy, sprightly fashion plate Audrey Reny, überblonde Kim Kozol, VC smoothie Ernest Jacquet and the babe-a-licious Anne Trautenberg, art dealer Abi Goodman and her stunning sister, Alison Ross (who responded to a compliment about her dress by saying, "Who needs Saks when you can shop in Mom's closet?"), TV personalities Ted Wayman and Emily Rooney, and one guest who asked, "What's upstairs?" to which someone replied, "Dresses, shoes and attitude."

Meanwhile, in the skincare department, a product line with the motto "The Miracle of Rebirth for Skin and Soul" prompted someone to remark, "Who knew you could be born again at Saks?" and the aesthetician offering to map guests' "enlarged pores, wrinkles, and UV spots," caused one guest to dryly observe, "Just what I look for in a cocktail party." Then there was the man who was informed that the facial mask he was trying contained sake, to which he responded, "I've been face down in a glass of sake a million times. If only I'd known it was good for my skin..."

However, the archest exchange occurred when a woman said, "I don't look bad for a middle-aged woman," to which her friend shot back, "Oh, come on! How many 146-year-olds do you know?"

At Saks, top row: Susan Callendar and Leigh Weatherly; Tony Corey, Suzanne Messere and C.J. Menard. Bottom row: Gary Croteau and Ken Dietz; Esti Parsons.

MAYBE THE HANGOVER WILL BE GONE BY THEIR 20TH...

Hollywood might have Vegas, but Boston has Uncasville, Conn.—or more precisely, Mohegan Sun, which celebrated its 10th anniversary in a style to which we'd gladly become accustomed.

Limos were sent to fetch guests, who were put up in deluxe accommodations for the weekend, given lavish gifts and spa treatments, and plied with food and drink, while the celebs (both demi and legit) included Jerry Seinfeld (who did an SRO stand-up set), Kevin Costner (who inexplicably played with a band we never knew he had), comedic genius Lily Tomlin, the impish Matthew Broderick, ex-Baywatch babe Carmen Electra, ex-Sopranos babe Drea de Matteo, former teen heartthrob Lance "I'm Gay!" Bass and his S.O., Reichen "I'm With the Famous Gay Guy!" Lehmkuhl, Matthew (Shaggy) Lillard, and such local notables as nightlife kingpin Patrick Lyons, celebrity chefs Jasper White and Todd English, and—best of all—Big Papi himself, who led a contingent of revelers from the VIP party at Ultra-88 to the casino floor for some late-night gambling.

The place was so packed with stars that the answer to the question, "Is there a doctor in the house?" was, "Yes. Doogie Howser, M.D.," since Neil Patrick Harris was there. In fact, the only celebrity no-show turned out to be Keith Urban, who checked into rehab instead.

Then again, pretty much everyone else felt like checking into rehab by Sunday morning, recalling that hackneyed motto "What happens in Uncasville stays in Uncasville." iB

At Mohegan Sun, clockwise from top left: Sophia Bush; Lance Bass; Carmen Electra, Drea de Matteo and Jamie-Lynn Sigler; Jerry Seinfeld and Mitchell Etess.

Sauza

TRES GENERACIONES

PERSEVERANCIA TRADICIÓN 1873

The beautiful blue agave grows naturally in the Jalisco region of Mexico around the town of Tequila.

That's the way we like it. So that's the way we leave it. Natural. Because that way, our tequila tastes of… well… agave. Pure and simple.

It doesn't taste of pesticides. It doesn't taste of herbicides. And it doesn't have the bitterness that comes from some cheaper production processes, either.

What all this means is that, like all our tequila, Sauza® Tres Generaciones® doesn't require the flavour enhancers that others have to add to mask less pleasant tastes.

Sauza® Tres Generaciones® tastes like tequila should taste. We know you'll enjoy it. That's why you won't find a trace of bitterness.

CRAZY FOR HAZEL

Boston sports fans (particularly the guys) love NESN's Hazel Mae. Her popularity became clear to me after she appeared in our bachelor/bachelorette issue last year, and I got flooded with e-mails from male readers wanting to meet her. If you google her, you'll find all kinds of tributes, including a Myspace fan site and a Wikipedia entry on her with a link to a song called "I'm in Love With Hazel Mae" (check it out at www.hazelmight.com). Fans have been spotted around town wearing "I Heart Hazel Mae" T-shirts. In short, she's the perfect cover model for our It List issue, highlighting the most buzz-worthy people, places and things in Boston right now. Here's to Hazel and all the other bright lights that add sparkle to our city.

STAR GAZING

What are you guys trying to do, give me a heart attack? My jaw dropped and my eyes popped out of my head like in one of those Tex Avery cartoons when I took my first look at your cover photo of Jennifer Coolidge (Nov. 22). Her smile just lights up a room. It's even better than your July 23, 2003, edition with Miss U.S.A., Susie Castillo. Wow!

PUPPY LOVE

While I adore many vain indulgences featured in the IMPROPER, I do hope to balance my sometimes-profligate nature with noncommercial giving this season. As soon as I learned that the least favorite gift to receive is a charitable donation made in one's name, I decided to sponsor the care of Peebles, a female chocolate-lab pup, as my holiday present to the IMPROPER. Thanks for making my life more interesting this year. Sweet, amenable and heart-melting, Peebles could use a new home for the New Year. ID: 20061119, at www.labs4rescue.com.

THE WORD

EDITED BY JOLYON HELTERMAN

Tibs 'n' Tips

When Befekadu Defar purchased Coleman's Café with plans to serve Ethiopian food, he figured he'd take things slow. After all, some of the Somerville Irish pub's regulars had been loyal patrons for many, many years. Why not keep the old guard comfortable as he eased in the new? "I wanted to give them time to trust us," says Defar. Plenty of time: For four years, Defar and his wife, Beleynesh Hagos, kept the Coleman's name and stocked the menu with bar-food standards like steak tips, wings and nachos. Occasionally, they'd introduce "modified" Ethiopian dishes onto the specials board—like yebg tibs (sautéed lamb with jalapeños) served on a decidedly nontraditional hoagie roll. But otherwise, the old Coleman's vibe hummed happily along.

It wasn't until they were forced to close their J.P. eatery, Fasika, earlier this year that they decided to jump in feet first. In recent weeks, they've relocated the bar to one side of the room, set up traditional stools and mesobs (wicker tables) on the other and rechristened the place Fasika. A half-wall divides the pub side from the restaurant side—although the contrast between the Ethiopian artworks on one wall and the neon Budweiser signs on the other conveys the venue's dual-use nature just as plainly.

The biggest change, however, is the food. No longer relegated to mere cameo status, Ethiopian cuisine reigns supreme on the new menu. Stewed and sautéed meats, legumes and veggies are served the traditional way—in small mounds set atop family-style platters lined with swaths of injera, a tangy cross between pancake and crêpe that serves double duty as utensils. (No forks here: Tear off a piece of injera and use it to scoop up bite-sized portions of food.) Yebg tibs ($9.95), the spicy lamb sauté, is back for good (sans hoagie), along with dishes like doro alitcha (stewed chicken with ginger and garlic, $9.95) and kitfo ($9.95), a decadent take on steak tartare made by tossing raw, chopped beef with the spiciest melted butter imaginable. Vegetarian diners have many options, including yemisir wot (split lentils braised in a chili sauce, $7.50). At meal's end, don't forget that Ethiopia is arguably the coffee capital of the world. Beans are roasted and ground to order, brewed strong and served in clay pots called gebenas ($2).

And what of the Coleman's-era bar grub? It's still around, but the tables have turned, as the American fare has been pared down to a few core items. But fans of steak tips and burgers can look forward to frequent cameo appearances on the specials board. After all, says Defar, whom the old-timers now call Mr. D: "This is a local bar, where everyone's been coming for 18–20 years. We plan to give them what they want." Fasika, 145-147 Broadway, Somerville (617-628-9300). —JH

Silent Knight

American-born comedian and master clown Avner Eisenberg cut his comedic teeth as a silent street performer in Paris during the '70s. In 1984, his one-man show Avner the Eccentric was a Broadway hit, and in 1985 he starred alongside Michael Douglas and Kathleen Turner in The Jewel of the Nile. Avner the Eccentric performs at Boston's Lyric Stage through Dec. 23.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: Give us a quick rundown of your new show.

Avner Eisenberg: Well, it's kind of like Waiting for Godot… with tricks. It's about a character waiting for a show to start, but it never starts, leaving him to wrestle with some physics gone awry.

IB: As a child your two loves were snakes and juggling. Did Avner the Herpetologist just not have the same ring to it?

AE: [Laughs.] At the time that actually would have been more appealing, but it was never a choice between the two of them. I got into performing entirely by accident. I was in college studying chemistry and biology and wandered into the theater one day to escape a storm. That's the day I got my first role.

IB: Was it a tough road on your way to clown mastery? I've read that you were once arrested in Paris on the charge of public buffoonery.

AE: Yes, that did happen. You know, it was a long road, but it never seemed hard. I always had fun with it.

IB: You were recently inducted into the Clown Hall of Fame. What's that induction ceremony like?

AE: I actually didn't even get to the ceremony because I was working, so my brother accepted on my behalf. It was a great honor, though. You have to be nominated by someone who's already a member; my nominator was Red Skelton, which made it really special.

IB: Are you looking forward to your time in Boston?

AE: I actually haven't been back since 1985, so yes, very much so. I've got myself an apartment on Newbury Street for the month and can't wait to check it out.

IB: Lastly, do you think that you could do us a favor and persuade Carrot Top to take a similar vow of comedic silence?

AE: I honestly have no idea who that is.

IB: You're a lucky, lucky man.

Au Bon Pain Reliever... Mary Reece knows plenty of Boston professionals need help managing pain—not to mention their schedules. AltThera, her new acupuncture, massage and chiropractic place in Downtown Crossing, is geared to working stiffs with only an hour to spare. (In fact, wait more than 15 minutes, and your massage is free.) On Thursdays, try the lunch special, a 15-minute massage for $15. Ahh... the tension's fading already. 30 Chauncy St., Boston (617-542-8500). www.altthera.com.

It's in the Shop... A new sports car may not be in the budget, but that doesn't mean you can't shop at Porsche. The Porsche Design Store, that is—set to open at Copley Place this month. No drivable models here; just high-quality eyewear, luggage, jewelry and more, all with the signature label. Even better, buy yourself a few Porsche-brand key rings: Strew them around strategically, and your perceived net worth goes up $80,000 in no time. Copley Place, Boston (617-369-5000).

Picture Perfect... Al and Tipper Gore have been busy. First, it was his bestselling book and documentary film. Now, the former second lady's selling photos at Mitchell Gold + Bob Williams furniture stores, including 30 she took during her White House stint. Each one's available in a custom gallery frame with her signature and a certificate of authenticity. A portion of the sales goes to the Gores' foundation, Climate Project. 142 Berkeley St., Boston (617-266-0075).

Virgin No More... Sure, we're sad to see the Back Bay Virgin Records close its doors. But it won't be long before another megastore pops up in it place. This spring, Best Buy plans to fill the 45,000 square-foot space with flat-screen TVs, speakers, computer gear, cameras and everything else techy type drool over. What's more, the chain's bargain prices o CDs, DVDs and video games should help soften th blow. Virgin who? 360 Newbury St. Boston. www.bestbuy.com.

Smart Card... After seeing too man men buy bad gifts for their sweeties Susan Pacheco and Leaf Shea, owner of the Brookline boutique Vintage dreamed up the Gentlemen's Card, a wallet-sized compendium of gift-buying strategies. FASH FLASH

It's All in the Wrist

It began a couple of years ago, when Enitan Landipo was at the gym. Frustrated by the lack of pocket in her gymwear to hold her money and keys, she was inspired to create wrist and ar "cuffs"—wide leather bracelets with built-in wallets. As a world traveler, Landipo soon foun that her cuffs came in handy anytime she didn't want to lug a bag about. After brainstormi with a friend in Australia, Landipo abandoned her dreary job in IT, created a company, Lalaa Na tion, and began designing. With manufacturing deals secured, she recently opened a shop Newton Centre. The lime-green walls, modern cube fixtures and touches of red show off h creations like the little works of art they are. And Landipo's prices are affordable. Leather cuf just $15, come in an array of colors, like bubble gum pink, orange, metallic gold and basic bla (though we find those a bit bondage-y). Her Coconut Bag, a purse ingeniously armored bright, super-smooth squares of coconut shells, sells for $70. Other items include funky em broidered bags, beaded purses and studded belts. Lalaa Nation, 77 Union St., Newton Cent (617-969-0698). www.lalaanation.com. —Marni Elyse Katz

STYLES CHANGE, GOOD TASTE DOESN'T.

Martin Miller's Gin, distilled in England, blended in Iceland for a gin of uncompromised perfection.

Martin Miller's Gin is small batch, pot distilled in England, using the freshest hand picked botanicals to ensure the correct balance of juniper, spice and citrus notes. It then travels to Iceland to be blended with the purest water on earth. So we can say, without compromise, we go the distance to create a gin of unparalleled taste and Arctic clarity.

TASTY TIDBITS

The Spice Is Right

Rendang's All Here... As the old saying goes: When one Harvard Square Malaysian restaurant closes, another opens in its place. Eh... maybe that's not how it goes, but that's how it went down this fall in Cambridge, when restaurateurs Bik Yonjan and Solman Chowdhury—owners of Om—bought out neighboring Penang and converted it to Rendang. The duo renovated the spot, installing new lighting, upgrading the ambience and adding 30 additional seats. And while they did hold onto chef Gchee Hoo Chin, the menu is now a bit more adventurous (and spicier) with additions like pineapple beef and sabal-sauce shrimp. No liquor license yet, but our sources say it's in the works. 57 JFK St., Cambridge (617-576-2804).

Saved by the Bell Pepper... Looks like the competitive spirit at the South End's Sibling Rivalry is contagious. The nightly battling menus of chef-brothers Bob and Dave Kinkead will still be the main event, but on Monday nights there's now an undercard. Sous chefs Jake Smith and Simon Restrepo will each create a three-course prix-fixe menu using common ingredients, and guests can choose whose $35 meal best suits their stomach. Alcohol, tax and gratuity are additional, and you'll need a reservation. All right guys, let's have a nice clean fight—and don't stop cookin' till you hear the bell. 525 Tremont St., Boston (617-338-5338).

I-Café

Rendang

Sweet on Southie... While South Boston has a reputation for being a tough-guy town, Glenn Quirion and David Venter are doing their part to bring a little sweetness to the neighborhood. In mid-November the pair opened Sweet Tooth Boston, a dessert and pastry spot, on Broadway. Everything at Sweet Tooth is made from scratch and baked to order, including cakes, cupcakes, cookies and more for any occasion—and they even offer free consultations to help plan your pastry binge. Our advice: Start with the white-chocolate-chip pistachio cookies, and work your way through the menu from there. 371 West Broadway, South Boston (617-268-2555).

Sweet Tooth

Crêpe Expectations... There may be no I in "team," but there's an I in café. Well, in Somerville there is. Last month, the I-Café opened its doors in a small basement space on Broadway, serving up an assortment of crêpes—both sweet (chocolate, banana, strawberry) and savory (chicken endive and pesto, tuna melt)—as well as coffee, espresso and a variety of teas. Settle into one of the comfy couches, sip a steamy cup of Moroccan sweet mint tea and take in the exotic North African decoration. 1133 Broadway, Somerville (617-776-0010). —RL

OH, CELL NO

Cell phones: You can't live with 'em, you ca— CALL ENDED

I used to think I was pretty clever, having a cell phone but no land line. "Why would I have a land line?" I'd say to people. "That would just be redundant. You can always get me on my cell phone." Well, there's a reason why land lines aren't going away any time soon: Cell phones are about as sturdy and durable as a blown-glass bowling pin. The giant, avocado-green rotary-dial phone in the house where I grew up looked like it was installed by Alexander Graham Bell himself, but that sucker never broke. Whereas with cell phones, you can hardly use one to bludgeon your personal assistant without it breaking and losing all your digits for Tyra and Narcotics Anonymous.

Consider my last phone, a Motorola. It has a 1.3-megapixel camera; it can shoot video; and you can even use it as a phone. Then, 13 months after I buy it, Hello Moto says goodbye. Of course, its warranty's good for just 12 months. Funny how that happens.

Nevertheless, I take it to the Verizon store to see if it's salvageable. The tech woman pops out the battery and examines a water-sensitive sticker on the back of the phone. This sticker is supposed to turn from white to red when it's submerged. Last June I noticed that this piece of paper was already red, despite the fact that my phone had never been wet. "What a scam," I thought. "Now if my phone ever breaks, they're going to claim I used it as a mackerel lure and void the warranty." Sure enough, the tech woman points at the red paper and declares, "The phone's not working because you got it wet." "That's not true," I tell her. "Not only has this phone never been near water, but that paper's been red for seven months and the phone's worked fine." She stares blankly at me for a moment, then declares, "You're really lucky that your phone worked for seven months after you got it wet."

So I enter my name into the store's computerized waiting list and sit down to fantasize about how I'm going to destroy my old phone when I get home. I'm leaning toward using a machete. After a half-hour, I approach the counter to ask if I might get a phone sometime this month. But the guy at the counter can't talk to me because—this is true—he himself is on hold with Verizon customer service, because the in-store computerized waiting system is broken.

An hour and a half after walking through the door, I have a new phone. Since my contract wasn't up for renewal, and phones without service agreements cost roughly $22,000, I've signed on for another two years with Verizon. I also somehow cash in the "free upgrade" that I would've been eligible for next summer, had my phone lasted that long. Ironically, my "upgraded" phone isn't as good as my old one. At least I only paid $145.98 for it. Don't you ever say Ezra Dyer doesn't drive a hard bargain.

My new phone is an LG, which stands for "Life's Good." That's the kind of optimism I demand from my phone.

I've had my new cell-piece for about four hours when the "Life's Good" decides Death's Better. It thinks it's charging, yet it's not plugged in. The battery dies, and that's all, she wrote. LG, we barely knew ye.

The next day I'm back in the Verizon store to pick up my third phone in three days. I credit Verizon for their honesty—their motto is, "It's All About the Network." They tell you right up front that it's not so much about the phones.

I've now officially given up on having a cool phone. This time around I pick out the worst phone I can get. It looks like a cinder block with an antenna. To use the built-in camera, I need to pull a curtain over my head and hope my subject doesn't move for 10 minutes. There are paintings of my phone on the walls of caves in Africa. But who cares? It's just going to break anyway.

I'VE HAD MY NEW CELL-PIECE FOR ABOUT FOUR HOURS WHEN THE "LIFE'S GOOD" DECIDES DEATH'S BETTER

As the Verizon rep readies my phone, I give her a little lecture on how unacceptable I find this level of service. I'm a busy man, and I rely on my cell phone as my only means of contact, and here they've left me unreachable for two straight days. Thanks to this fiasco, there's no telling how many jobs I've missed out on, how many friends think I'm being aloof. I repeat: unacceptable.

As I walk out the store, I eagerly call my voicemail for the first time in 48 hours. I have no new messages. iB

Celtic Psychosis

A month of watching the C's can turn a man into a maniac.

I think the Celtics might kill me, and I'm not sure if that's a bad thing. Does that make sense? It does to me—and no, I haven't been accepting deliveries from Robert Parrish's UPS guy. It makes sense because after sitting through the first month of the hoops season, I've become a lazy-eyed psychopath. I don't know up from down, black from white, Jessica Simpson from Jessica Tandy. But most of all, I don't know a horribly pathetic NBA team from an exciting, young and playoff-bound squad.

With the Celtics, it's either all or nothing; there's no in-between. The season started out a mess, and by the time I made my first trip to the TD FleetCenterNorth Garden, they were 1-3 and taking on the Utah Jazz. I'd become so disheartened with the Cs' ineptitude, I was going partly hoping to see Utah forward Andrei Kirilenko—inexplicably my favorite NBA player—block some shots. And while AK-47 swatted his share (five), watching the Celtics get so outplayed in every facet of the game was more frustrating than removing an electronics appliance from one of those crazy-glued, hard PLASTIC PACKAGES!!—sorry, I just got back from Best Buy. Anyway, by the end of the game my voice was hoarse. I hadn't screamed so much at a Boston sports figure (Doc Rivers) since I spent the summer of '99 booing Reggie Jefferson. Why had Tony Allen played 12 more minutes than Gerald Green? Why had Allen played 12 more minutes than anyone? Why didn't someone make Brian Scalabrine untuck his warm-ups? Why do the Celtics insist on putting that noise-o-meter up on the big screen when they always end up having to play pathetic computer-generated crowd noise that makes the team look pathetic and its fans feel like patsies? There were many such unanswered questions. I was so miserable that I went and got drunk at the Fours.

The next day they blew a 25-point lead to the Lebrons, and two nights later pissed away one of those games-that-you-must-win-if-you-consider-yourself-a-legit-playoff-contender at home against Orlando. Now everything was in disarray. They were 1-6; it sounded like Bob Cousy had all but ordered a hit on Sebastian Telfair and Allen; Scalabrine had been strangled by the waistband on his warm-ups.

But then something happened. Three games; three wins. Sure, they weren't exactly playing the '96 Bulls (72-10), but it also wasn't the '01 Bulls (15-67). For that Friday night game against Portland I was back at the Garden, but this time it was different. The Celtics won by 30 points; Gerald outplayed Allen by six minutes. Hell, Kendrick Perkins didn't even foul out. I know this was the Blazers, but the Celtics looked like a team with a purpose. They played together and did so with amazing intensity. Everything made sense; I was so pumped that I went and got drunk at the Fours.

Then the wheels came off again. As I write this, Boston's lost two of three (to a pair of teams that are a combined 8-20 this year), and I'm convinced they'll be playing ping-pong this summer. By the time you read this they'll probably already be on a three-game win streak. By the time you're done reading this, they'll have lost two straight. It's maddening, and while I'm not sure what to do with myself, I do know what I want the Celtics to do: develop an identity.

I know it's more a matter of time than choice, but as a fan, I need it to happen. If you're going to be an NBA bottom-feeder this year, fine. I can deal with that. I love the NBA, and I love the Celtics; I'm not going anywhere. Go to a rotation of Telfair, Green, Perkins, Pierce, Wally, Big Al, Rondo, DWest and Gomes, and see what they can do. Forget the playoffs. The only way to find out if some of these kids are for real is to put them on the court.

I'M NOT SURE WHAT TO DO WITH MYSELF, BUT I DO KNOW WHAT I WANT THE C'S TO DO: DEVELOP AN IDENTITY

But if you want to be relevant now, then go for it. Lose Doc, give up on some of the younger guys and make a push for another marquee player. You're in the Eastern Conference—the minor leagues of the NBA. Anything can happen, so get after it.

I'm sick of mediocrity. I'm sick of inconsistency. And I'm sick of thinking it's going to be like this forever. Do something—anything!—and I'll be happy. Or at least I think I will, and at this point that's all I can ask for. IB

THE DANCE

BY JOHN D. SPOONER

Keep Them Laughing

The antics and adventures of one part dog

A piece of Mark Cohen's e-mail address is "onepartdog." If you know him, the other 99 parts are equally intriguing. I think he's one of the funniest people in our city, constantly doing standup or shtick wherever he wanders.

Mark has cinematic adventures almost daily. For instance: He's a passionate defender of Israel and believes that anti-Semitism lies just beneath the surface of human nature. For that reason, Mark refused for many years to buy a German automobile. But car lust took over, and he finally bought a Mercedes, something he'd sworn he'd never do. The car proved problematic for several reasons, and Mark called to return his mistake.

"Forget it," he was told. "You've driven it for weeks." He argued with management but they wouldn't take back the car. The next day, Mark appeared in front of the agency wearing a sandwich board. It read in bold letters, "THIS AGENCY DISCRIMINATES AGAINST JEWISH PEOPLE." In 20 minutes he got his money back.

Mark and a partner owned one of the best film and TV editing businesses in Boston. He became quite well known for his deadbeat bill collection abilities, once dressing up like an Orthodox rabbi complete with side curls. His target lived in a town house in Charles River Square on Beacon Hill, a location not accustomed to pickets. Again, Mark had printed a large sign: "Your rotten neighbor has stiffed devout people of $20,000. How did you allow him in here? If you only knew." No one likes picketing. The deadbeat produced a cashier's check.

Jack Benny prided himself on never laughing at other comedians, except for George Burns. Burns could walk into a room with a deadpan expression, look around, and Benny would burst into hysterics. I feel the same about Mark Cohen. He'll walk into a room with a little shuffle and give an evil leer that says, "I know what you're all thinking." And what they're thinking about is sex.

Mark wrote, produced, directed and acted in short comedy sketches. One parodied late-night TV promotions like "Top Hits of the Cowboy Singers" or "Favorite Christmas Carols." Mark appeared as his alter ego, a rabbi dressed all in black, playing against Pinky, his hand puppet. Together, as Pinky and Yehudi, they'd put new lyrics to melodies like the Christmas classics: "Rabbi Bloom is Coming to Town," "It's Beginning to Look a Lot Like Purim," "Silent Kvetch," "I Saw Mommy Kissin Gertrude Stein" and so forth. He also cre ated Vanessa Panache, a character he playe in drag, to parody late-night TV ads promis ing young girls they can become model "Show me a girl with $300," Vanessa coo "and I'll show you a girl who can dream becoming a star."

He started doing imitations of T comics as a child and learned early tha being funny could earn him points wit girls—and later with women. Indeed, hi second principle of life is "Let your pen be your guide." (His first principle, whic seems to contradict the second: "Contr your demons." Tough to do, fun to watch.

Mark attended a variety of schools an colleges. Bounced from Bowling Gree State, he resurfaced at Emerson. "I thoug I'd died and gone to heaven. Emerson wa an insane asylum in the late '60s, ear '70s—way ahead of its time. I ran for pres dent of the school with the motto, 'Let make sure our drugs are pure.'" At Emerso Mark studied acting and worshiped comed ans like Lenny Bruce. "The great comed ans," he says, "are all tormented. Lenn Bruce, Shelly Berman, Larry David: The big lesson is that everyone, to a greater lesser extent, is full of it."

Every day brings different routines f Mark. Not so long ago he saw a bulleti from the Beth Israel Deaconess Medic Center offering help for sexual addictio "What a great way to meet women," Ma thought. He signed up and after attendi several sessions was noticed by a visiti psychiatrist who knew him. "What the he are you doing here?" the shrink demande

"Would you believe curing my sexu addiction?" Mark replied.

"Out!" the doctor ordered. "This is no joke, this is life. Out!" Mark left. "Heads wi roll for this!" he yelled, skipping away do the hospital corridor like a madcap elf.

A cockeyed optimist, Mark believes t morrow will bring the perfect joke, the pe fect routine, the woman of his dreams. H working on an autobiography, sharing h antic views of life. Some sentimental f vorites: "You should enter every new re tionship saying, 'Her name is like a bell th rings in my heart.'" And then, of cours "When seeking absolute beauty, start wi the foot." IB

Inveterate WBZ-TV 4 arts-and-entertainment anchor Joyce Kulhawik has been covering every aspect of Boston's cultural scene—film, theater, dance, music, visual arts—for over 25 years. Born and raised in Connecticut, she received a B.A. in English and secondary education from Simmons College in 1974 and a masters in teaching from the University of Vermont in 1977. She joined WBZ in 1978 as an associate producer and tipster for Evening Magazine and in 1981 became the station's arts-and-entertainment reporter. An accomplished pianist and singer, she's also a three-time cancer survivor and since 1983 has served as the honorary chairperson of the American Cancer Society's Daffodil Days—its largest statewide fundraising event. An Emmy winner and member of the Boston Society of Film Critics, she has been honored by her alma mater, as well as Berklee College of Music and the Lyric Stage Company. She lives with her husband and daughter in the Boston area.

Jonathan Soroff: You're the only arts-and-entertainment reporter left on TV in Boston. You're a legend. What's the best part of your job?

Joyce Kulhawik: I get paid to go out and immerse myself in movies, theater, dance, the symphony…. It's extraordinary. This is what I've always loved. I was always interested in drama and felt there was more truth in a novel than in a newspaper. So to be able to get paid to do this and talk about it, to tell people… that's fantastic.

JS: How do you see your role as a critic?

JK: Well, it's not enough to say "It's good," "It's bad," or "I loved it," "I hated it." I think people look to critics to analyze how and why a thing works or doesn't. If someone who watches me knows they don't share my taste, that's as useful as if they always agreed with my opinions.

JS: Any opinion on that old saying, "People who can, do; people who can't become critics"?

JK: I think it's sort of irrelevant. I'm not a great actor, but I think I'm qualified to judge good acting. I know if it works. I'm not a great cook, either, but I know terrific food when I taste it.

JS: Most memorable moment in the theater?

JK: One of them was when Dreamgirls was here pre-Broadway, and Jennifer Holiday sang that song at the end of the first act, just before the curtain came down, and the theater erupted. I think every single person in the audience knew a major career was launched.

JS: You must get asked this all the time: favorite movie?

JK: I do, and it's so tough. Let's see. Whenever The Godfather is on, I can't not watch it. It pulls me in every time. I love This Is Spinal Tap. I love The Philadelphia Story. Ingmar Bergman's Fanny and Alexander. I just love movies.

"NAOMI WATTS DOES NOTHING FOR ME. TO ME, SHE HAS NO SPARK. AND KEVIN SPACEY, HE'S LIKE A ONE-NOTE ACTOR."

JS: Pet peeves in the theater?

JK: Talking. People getting up. Unsupervised teenagers running around the movie theater. I instantly go into school teacher mode and say, "Back in your seat. Right now."

JS: How about the way people dress, or more precisely, don't bother to dress, for the theater in Boston? Does that bug you?

JK: At the risk of sounding like an old fuddy-duddy, I can't stand when I go to the Wang Center on a Saturday night, and it's all gorgeous with the marble and gilt, and there's something wonderful on stage like Baryshnikov dancing—and someone's there in sneakers and a parka.

JS: Rudest celebrity you ever interviewed?

JK: Tommy Lee Jones is notoriously difficult, but I'm not sure I'd say rude. I had a very bad experience with John Travolta. He was in a bit of a slump, career-wise, and my question was "You've had some major successes, but you've also had a few bombs. How do you deal with that?" I wasn't blaming him in any way, but I was interested in how someone in that business deals with the ups and downs. But he just exploded. He said, "Bombs?! There've been no bombs!"

JS: Most over- or underrated actor today?

JK: Overrated? Naomi Watts does nothing for me. To me, she has no spark. Kevin Spacey, he's like a one-note actor. Then there's someone like Julia Roberts, who I think is strangely underrated, despite what a huge star she is. I think she's capable of tremendous things.

JS: One actor you'd cheat on your husband with?

JK: [Laughs.] Well, at one time it might have been Daniel Day-Lewis.

JS: Anybody ever really intimidate you?

JK: Yeah. I think Harrison Ford kind of did that to me. Gregory Peck, for sure; it was like being in front of Mount Rushmore. I found it difficult to get any words out with Mel Gibson. He was so good-looking, so pretty almost, that I was tongue-tied.

JS: How do you stay so eternally upbeat?

JK: That's what they pay me for. No, the truth is that I am a very sunny personality. It's not hard for me to seem very upbeat, because I am. I'm a cancer survivor. I truly, truly believe—and I have since I was a little girl—that anything is possible. You just have to figure out how. So I'm happy to be here. The opportunity to have cancer three times and get over it helps, too. You're reminded in the middle of your life just how fragile it is, so you learn to appreciate it every single day. That you're here is phenomenal. Don't waste a minute.

JS: How many movies do you see in a week?

JK: It depends. Some weeks I might see three, some I might see five, some only one. It depends on the release schedule and what my schedule looks like.

JS: What's your favorite movie snack?

JK: Buttered popcorn, plain and simple. But I can only do it three times and then I'm sick of it, and I've got to let a week by before I have it again.

JS: Ever had a viewer demand their 10 buc back because they saw a movie you recommended and they hated it?

JK: I did once, and I said, "That's ridic lous. I never said you had to share my op ion. You have a brain." But I love it wh viewers call and say, "You're crazy." I ta every single one of those calls.

JS: What do you think about the proliferati of "entertainment news"?

JK: I hate it. They just spew this meaningl stuff, and it affects me, but there are some called stories I refuse to report. That so-a so broke up—I say, "That's not really new I think that stuff is just ridiculous. It's emb rassing, and it's embarrassing to cover it, a it wasn't that way when I started.

JS: Red carpet beauty secret?

JK: I have one of these very cool foldi mirrors that's tiny. Pressed powder. Fre lipstick. And good hair.

JS: Any fashion faux pas you regret?

JK: The entire 1980s. I can't even believ was let out of the house. I saw a retrospe tive of myself recently and one outfit w more hideous than the next. Big chec and shoulder pads. I thought, "If I cou survive that wardrobe, it's no wonder tha could survive cancer."

JS: Last question: the highlight of your career

JK: Three moments leap to mind. One w being asked to be Roger Ebert's coho That call came out of the blue. Anoth was delivering the commencement addr at Simmons College and getting an ho orary doctorate from my alma mater. A the last was the year that Matt and B won the Oscar. They came into the ro afterward to face questions from the pr and when they saw me they said, "H Joyce!" and held up the Oscar. I felt lik had won it. iB

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

Hazel Mae

Most female sports reporters are—how to put this delicately?—no Melissa Stark. Take a tour around the sidelines of the NFL, and in front of the network cameras you'll see evidence of the stereotype that femininity is incompatible with authoritative sports knowledge. Luckily, the New England Sports Network is smarter than that, and the host of NESN SportsDesk, Red Sox Rewind and The Buzz is—how to put this delicately?—a smokin' babe. (Some enterprising vendor has even been hawking "I Heart Hazel Mae" T-shirts.) In a world where you have gruff helmet-haired women on one end and running-punch-line Jillian Barberie on the other, Hazel Mae has forged her own role on the premise that a woman needn't be dowdy to command respect. Indeed, the native Canadian (and, no surprise, hockey fan) deftly interviews jocks from all corners of the sports universe with poise and a good-natured sense of fun that could make a fan out of Keith Hernandez. When Mae inevitably moves to the national stage, we have but one piece of advice: Be careful around Joe Namath.

the it list

Once again, we present you with our annual rundown of all that is It in Boston—the most buzzworthy people, places and things in our high-IQ city—at this moment in history. Perhaps in some cases, the mirror of time will prompt us to look back and wonder what we were thinking, but in the capacity of cultural umpire, we're just calling It like we see It.

Video Game Workout Bikes

Finally, a way to combine video games with exercise that isn't Dance Dance Revolution: Expresso workout bikes at Cambridge Racquet and Fitness Club. Designed by a team of mechanical engineers and game programmers, the bikes feature a video screen displaying a virtual route, and your on-screen progress is determined by how hard you pedal (and where you steer with the handlebars). What's more, the bikes (four in total with a few more on the way) are networked so you can race against your fellow gym rats on courses from one to 20 miles in length. The courses include the Alps, a college campus and even outer space. A few months ago, getting your own TV screen on a treadmill was cutting-edge. Now you can have an interactive networked bike race around the galaxy. 215 First St., Cambridge (617-491-8989). www.cambridgefitness.com.

Daisuke Matsuzaka

We're not sure you can put a price on "It," but $51 million—the amount the Red Sox paid for the right just to negotiate with the Japanese pitching phenom—about does it. One of the pleasures of winter is that it's the only time you can allow yourself unconditional optimism regarding the Sox' latest acquisitions, and Daisuke Matsuzaka will be the man on everybody's mind from now till April—assuming the Sox and über-agent/asshole Scott Boras agree on a contract (and we think they will). The questions are legion: Does Matsuzaka throw a "gyroball"? How will he handle the pressure of playing in Boston? Will the Sausage Guy open a sushi cart to accommodate the horde of Japanese media who will chronicle Matsuzaka's every move? If the Sox' new ace faces the Yankees' Hideki Matsui during spring training, Fort Myers might explode from the hype.

Rendering of the Mandarin Oriental

Swanky International Hotels

A few years back, boutique hotels were the thing to build in Boston. Small was the new big. But headed into 2007, we're seeing a new trend: the ascension of the international luxury hotel. On Boylston Street, the Mandarin Oriental is rising in the shadow of the Pru. The Intercontinental is open for business on the waterfront. And in January, the old Ritz becomes the Taj Boston. Whatever your fat-cat, big-pimpin' business hotel of choice, you can now count Boston among the places to expend that expense account.

First Act Guitars

Volkswagen loves to create themed throw-ins with their cars (like the Trek mountain bike that came with the Jetta), but the First Act GarageMaster guitar promotion is one of its wackiest yet. Imagine the marketing meeting where someone said, "Look: We'll give away electric guitars with the Jetta and Rabbit, and make it so people can play them through their car stereo. Then we'll hire Slash." The big winner in a national ad blitz that also featured the legendary Nigel "This one goes to 11" Tufnell: Copley Square–based First Act. And, while it seems a gimmick, VW may have tapped a well of latent First Act guitarists, too. We checked eBay and found only seven GarageMasters separated from "the world's fastest amplifier." 745 Boylston St., Boston (617-226-7899). www.firstact.com.

Red snapper with hojiso flowers at Oishii

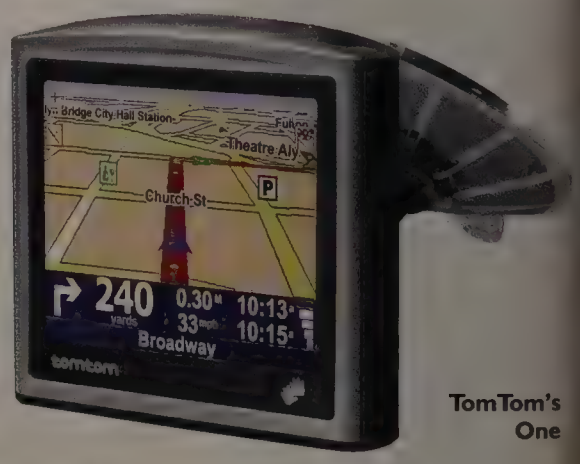
Oishii

It's official: Washington Street is to upscale dining what Newbury Street is to upscale shopping, and Oishii is the newest player on the scene. Chef-owner Ting San's third Oishii location unapologetically assumes the mantle of the most expensive Japanese restaurant in the city, but strangely enough, that might be part of the reason it's so popular. If you're on a date or out to impress a business client, a reservation at Oishii says you're not messing around. Start off with the toro sandwiches and move on to the Kobe beef hand roll, and you've dropped $50 before you even set eyes on the wine list. So far, Oishii is proving that there's no such thing as too high-end when it comes to dining in the South End. 1166 Washington St., Boston (617-482-8868).

Miel

Brasseries

According to the Merriam-Webster dictionary, a brasserie is "an informal, usually French restaurant serving simple, hearty food." Right now, restaurateurs in Boston are embracing that concept in a big way and rolling out the steak frites and coq au vin faster than you can say "Julia Child." Brasserie Jo has been around for a while, but more recently the brasserie ranks have blown up with Eastern Standard (Kenmore Square), Bouchée (Newbury Street), Miel (Seaport) and Gaslight (South End). So let's all clink our glasses of table wine, tuck into our cassoulet and have a laugh about how we used to go to tapas bars.



TomTom's One

Portable GPS Systems

Lots of things are huge in Europe but don't translate to this side of the Atlantic—siestas, soccer and efficient rail service to name three. But one must-have electronic gadget in Europe is starting to make waves over here, too: portable GPS systems. Aftermarket navi systems are finally becoming cheap enough that even the occasional traveler can justify buying one—after all, how much would you pay never to have to ask for directions again? Last August, Concord-based TomTom introduced the $500 One, a small, color-touch-screen GPS that comes preloaded with maps of the U.S. and Canada. The pièce de résistance: You can download celebrity voices to guide you on your way. Current choices include John Cleese and Mr. T, the latter of whom would surely agree that maps are for suckas. www.tomtom.com.

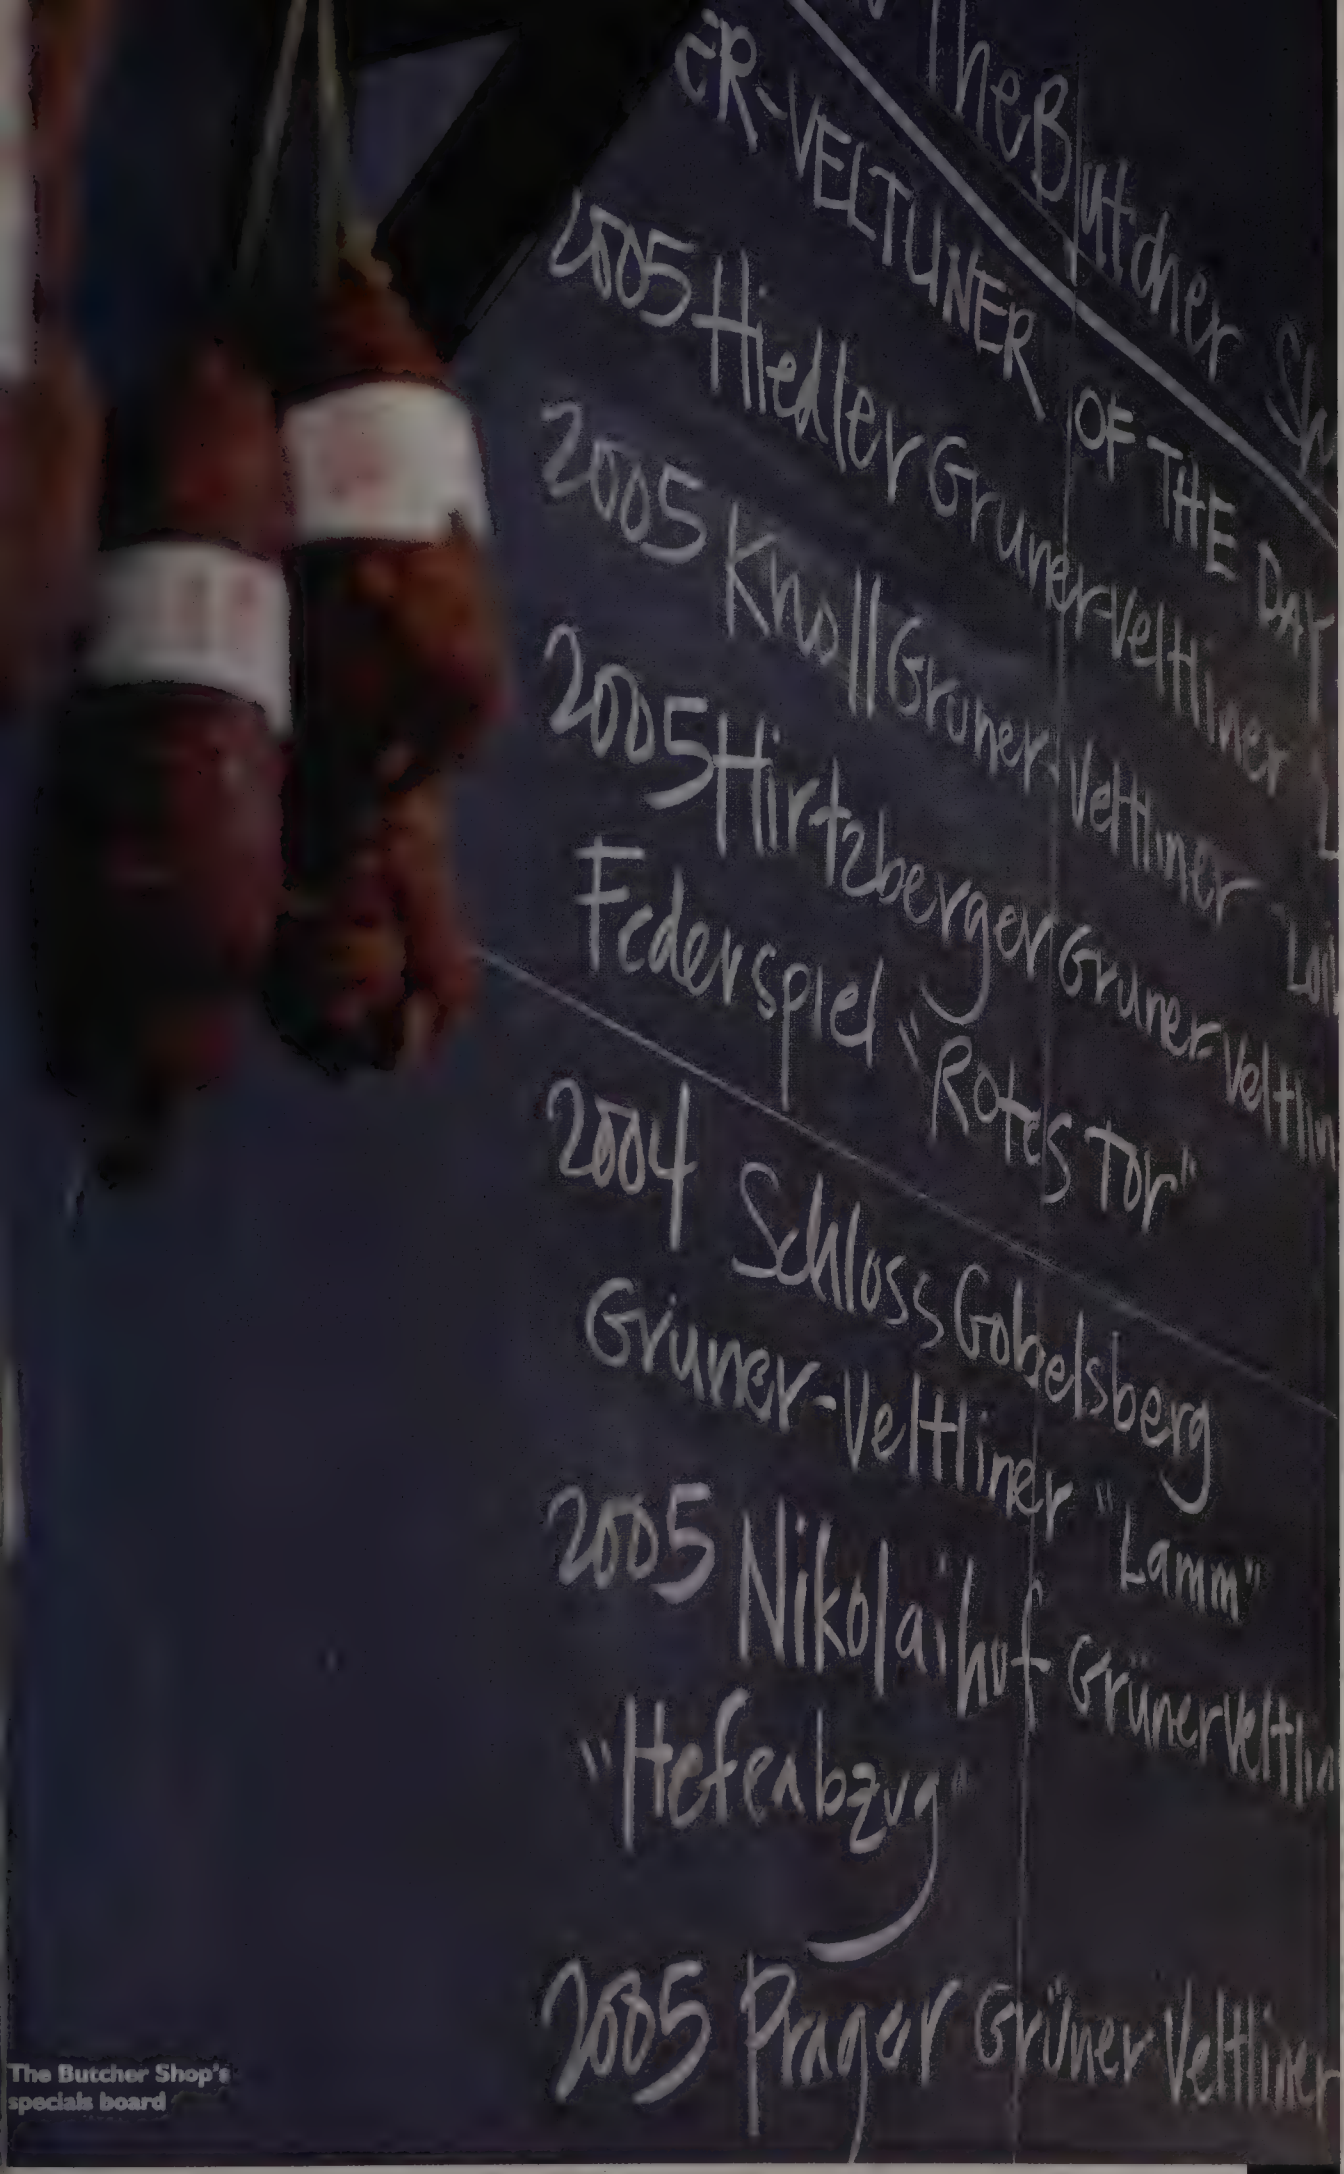
The new Institute of Contemporary Art

Hanging Out at the Waterfront

A few years back, there were roughly three occasions to visit the waterfront: a concert at the Bank of America Pavilion, a meal at the Barking Crab or an arraignment at the Moakley Courthouse. (OK, four reasons: Harpoonfest.) More recently, the postapocalyptic swath of land from Atlantic Ave. down to the Pavilion has begun to take shape as an honest-to-goodness neighborhood, one worth visiting for more than a plate of fried clams or a plea bargain. The Intercontinental building alone will give the area two new restaurants (Sushi-Teq and Miel) and a bar (Rumba), while the spectacular new Institute of Contemporary Art adds a major cultural landmark. Area stalwarts like Anthony's Pier 4 and Jimmy's are still alive and well. Farther down Northern Ave., Legal Test Kitchen gives residents of the Park Lane Seaport apartment building a fresh non-hotel culinary option. And the surest indicator that the waterfront has reached a tipping point? It's not even the new Westin Hotel on Summer Street or the Manulife building on Congress Ave., but what they both house on their ground floors: a Starbucks.

Rookies

We're on a roll here. In the first half of last season, Jonathan Papelbon emerged as the premier closer in the majors, and next year he'll probably end up in the Sox' starting rotation. The Pats, picking 21st in the draft, lucked into Laurence Maroney, who complements Corey Dillon nicely and is the heir apparent to the running-back throne. And the Celtics snagged wily Kentucky guard Rajon Rondo, who could be our point guard of the future if the C's ever figure out a set role for him. We recently asked Tommy Heinsohn who'd be earning the most Tommy Points this year, and he replied, "I loved Walter McCarty, but I'm becoming extremely fond of Rajon Rondo."



The Butcher Shop's specials board

The Butcher Shop's Grüner Veltliner of the Day

In a day and age when restaurateurs anxiously tweak their menus according to the foodie fad du jour (Kobe beef jerky?), the Butcher Shop's deliberately tone-deaf Grüner Veltliner of the Day is a breath of fresh air. Make that a sip of crisp, white vino: Chef-owner Barbara Lynch and wine director extraordinaire Cat Silirie don't need market research (chardonnay!) or the movie Sideways (pinot noir!) to build an appealing wine list. Instead, they rely on their palates to tell them that this somewhat obscure Austrian varietal is delicious and food-friendly—and they offer a special glass of grüner daily so that you can, too. Let the lemmings drink last year's pinot grigio with a bowl of pomegranate soup. Ushering in a trend, rather than slavishly following one, is a trend we can get on board with. 552 Tremont St., Boston (617-423-4800). www.thebutchershopboston.com.

Robby Roadsteamer

This may come as a surprise to a guy whose latest album is titled Postcards From the Den of Failure, but we could see Robby Roadsteamer becoming a big success in the near future. With a voice that makes Dickie Barrett sound like Tiny Tim, Roadsteamer infuses his music with humor and a healthy dose of unapologetic Masshole-ism—this is a guy, after all, who has a tattoo on his arm of the orange dinosaur at Route 1 Mini Golf in Saugus. With a gig cohosting with Hardy on WBCN and a slew of skits on his Web site, Roadsteamer fuses stand-up comedy with surprisingly catchy music (try to get the anthemic chorus to "I Put a Baby in You" out of your head). And he puts on a great live show. So can joke-rock succeed on a bigger stage than the one at Great Scott in Allston? Just ask Tenacious D. www.roadsteamer.com.

Vintage Kicks

As Air Jordans grow uglier by the year, the enduring appeal of the Air Force One is affirmed anew. From mainstream stores like City Sports to offbeat boutiques like Bodega, retro sneakers are enjoying a good run in Boston. Karmaloop, one of the biggest online purveyors of streetwear, has its flagship store on Newbury Street, and the Adidas Superstar Vintage is one of its top sellers. Now don't you wish you'd hung onto those Velcro Kangaroos?

Karmaloop

Puggles

Screw the AKC! They might not be invited to the Westminster dog show, but the puggle (a cross between a pug and a beagle) is the current star of the designer-mutt world. Sorry, Labradoodle; you may have a thicker coat, but that doesn't make you the hotter dog.

Beantown Shinedome Parties

Last February, friends Drew Lufkin and Nina Jung hit on an idea: throw a party for no particular reason and see who shows up. That premise—a party minus any specific agenda, be it networking, dating or otherwise—spawned the monthly Beantown Shinedome party, so-named for Lufkin's Bic'd noggin. What started as 20 people at the Foundation Lounge is now up to 60 or so meeting at a different bar each month. "It's just a way to get random people together," says Lufkin, 29, a Babson grad. "You bring a few friends, your friends meet other groups, and everyone expands their social circle. In Boston, that's sometimes difficult to do." The Shinedome takes a break for December, but it'll be back in January. If you want in, hit up Lufkin at dlufkin2003@yahoo.com.

Shinedome partiers

The Shhh-It List

Five things we're not so keen on

1. High-Tech Parking Meters on Newbury Street
   Sure, they shoot your car with a solar-powered death laser five minutes after your ticket expires, but they don't take American Express. Or, come to mention it, any credit cards whatsoever—until they can find a way to stop the machines from ripping people off. What was the point of these, again?
2. Skinny Jeans
   So you're telling us we have to get rid of all our old jeans, which were actually flattering to the human body, because the new rage is ugly-ass ankle-pinching denim?
3. Lieutenant Governor–elect Tim Murray
   On Nov. 21, lame duck Worcester mayor Murray caught flak when his city's Christmas tree (bigger then New York City's, mind you) flattened street signs and got stuck under a bridge at rush hour en route to the town square. On a related note, Murray is said to have requested a special parking place at the State House so he'll have somewhere to hitch Babe, his big, blue ox.
4. YouTube Lameness
   Do a search for "Boston" on YouTube and you'll see what many of your fellow city folk have been up to in recent months: not much. Hey, next time you want to videotape your friends having a sausage party in Allston… don't.
5. Muddled Drinks
   We don't even know what muddling is, but we think it has to do with smooshing plants into otherwise tasty alcohol. Bartender, step away from the pestle.

"Partisans"

Puritanism

It seems like every time Boston tries to step boldly into the 21st century, the ghost of John Winthrop rises from the grave and reminds everyone where the phrase "Banned in Boston" came from. Question 1 was soundly defeated at the ballot box, with much help from a Somerville police chief who implied that his fair city would look like downtown Beirut if every Trader Joe's was allowed to peddle the noxious bottles of anarchy known as Two Buck Chuck. Apple ran afoul of the Back Bay Architectural Commission when it had the gall to propose a sleek and modern store within a block of Ye Olde Newbury Street. (The company triumphed in the end, though, and its new store will add a dose of the 21st century to Boylston Street.) Shreve, Crump & Low brought in a new management team that tried to get all trendy, with disastrous results; after a wall-to-wall clearance sale, Shreve's is returning to its forte, namely cod pitchers and jewelry you won't see on Lindsay Lohan. Meanwhile, the only mildly controversial piece of art on the Common, "Partisans," has been banished to a bus stop near the World Trade Center. Boston: uptight and proud of it. IB

the pre-professionals

Teaching clinics and beauty schools promise high-end services at a low price. But can enthusiasm trump inexperience?

BY CARMEN NOBEL PHOTOGRAPHS BY MICHAEL MALYSZKO

When I was little, my parents took me to a dental hygiene school in southern Maine where students cleaned teeth for a few bucks and the opportunity to hone their skills on pediatric mouths. Mom and Dad got a deal, but I got an ordeal. At one point, an instructor in a white coat told my student hygienist that she was doing a fine job on me, except for one thing. "It's something important!" she chirped, and waited for the student to figure it out. The student thought and thought, and after about 20 minutes she got it: She'd forgotten to let me spit. In the meantime, tired of gagging, I had swallowed a throatful of tooth polish. And I vowed never to be a student's guinea pig again.

Recently, though, I began a freelance writing career, a move that required significant budget cuts. I realized that if I wanted to keep paying for skin care, massages and white teeth without breaking the bank, it might be time to reassess my stance on student services. The truth is that there are plenty of trade schools in Greater Boston that offer skilled services for brave bargain-hunters. What follows is my quest for the best.

Esther M. Wilkins Dental Hygiene Clinic

179 Longwood Ave., Boston (617-278-2700)
www.mcphs.edu
Mon. and Fri., 8 am–5 pm (during months that school is in session)

The Esther M. Wilkins Dental Hygiene Clinic offers cleanings, sealants, mouth guards and whitening trays for a fraction of what they cost in a typical dental office. Student hygienists are in their third year of study, having already cut their teeth on plastic models (and on each other).

They can't fit me in for a cleaning in time for the publication of this article, but a staff member offers me a quick tour. The equipment looks new, and all the patients in the clinic's 28 dental chairs seem calm and comfortable, as if their student hygienists have allowed them to spit.

Patients tend to be senior citizens and local students who have some time to spare—a cleaning in the clinic takes at least two hours, and that's on a healthy mouth. Every cleaning includes several checkpoints during which a supervisor will stop, check and grade the budding hygienist's work. There's an upside to this. "You're guaranteed a thorough cleaning because they want to score 100," says Andrea Gancarz-Gojgini, interim program director at the Forsyth School of Dental Hygiene, which runs the clinic.

Next spring, the clinic will start offering the Zoom! whitening service, a high-tech treatment that promises to make teeth eight shades whiter in less than an hour—and which costs well over $1,000 in many dental offices. "We don't have a fee yet, but it will be heavily discounted," says Gancarz-Gojgini.

Bottom line: Forsyth will clean your teeth for a fraction of the cost at an average dental office—but it may take four times as long.

Adult prophylaxis (cleaning): $45
Whitening trays: $100
Full series of X-rays: $46
Sealants: $20 per tooth

Catherine Hinds Institute of Esthetics

300 Wildwood Ave., Woburn (781-935-3344)
www.catherinehinds.com
Facials and waxing: Mon.–Sat., days; Mon.–Thu., evenings
Spa appointments: Mon., Thu. and Fri., call for hours

Nestled along an industrial road in the bowels of Woburn, the Catherine Hinds Institute has been training student estheticians since 1979. According to its Web site, the school's public clinic "provides a realistic hands-on opportunity for students to interface with clients in an environment that simulates the professional skin care clinic and day spa."

I call ahead and book a standard bikini wax ($15) and a Basic American facial ($24). My student esthetician, Vanessa, a petite young blonde with perfect skin, greets me almost immediately upon arrival. She leads me into the waxing room, which reminds me a little of a M.A.S.H. unit—bright lights, a dropped ceiling and stained-sheeted tables that are casually separated by dividers on wheels.

Catherine Hinds students have approximately 150 hours of classroom study before they begin working at the clinic, and this includes significant time practicing on each other. In fact, newbies are required to grow all of their body hair out a quarter of an inch, so they can wax each other later. "Even under our arms," Vanessa says, flinching. (Schadenfreude rears its ugly head as I imagine a classroom full of practiced beauties turning into werewolves, and Vanessa asks me why I'm smiling during a bikini wax.)

The wax is a little tacky, and it takes too long to dry because the room is humid; but Vanessa does a pretty good job. I've had slightly smoother waxes in prettier spas, but they cost twice as much. Vanessa lets me look at all the hair she just removed before she throws it away. She says this makes people feel like it was worth it. (I agree; to that end I still have my wisdom teeth in a jar.) "Hot, huh?" she says, à la Paris Hilton, and then assures me that the facial will be more pleasant.

It is, of course. Facials at Catherine Hinds take place in a softly lit room that holds up to 22 sheet-wrapped clients at a time. As in professional spas, there's ambient New Age music playing, and cell phones aren't allowed. Vanessa assesses my skin, summons her supervisor for a second opinion and then quietly goes to work, speaking only to warn me when she's going to pick at a blackhead or spread something wet on my face. It's soothing. I fall asleep and awaken with clean pores.

Bottom line: The Catherine Hinds student clinic offers good services at great prices. But steel yourself for the fact that your esthetician will be younger and prettier than you are.

Massage Institute of New England

22 McGrath O'Brien Highway, Somerville (617-666-3700)
www.mine-massageinstitute.com
Mon.–Thu., 10:30 am–8:30 pm; Fri.–Sat., 10:30 am–4 pm

The Massage Institute of New England sits in an office building on the edge of Somerville's Twin City Plaza, next to bargain stores such as SewFisticated, Sally Beauty Supply, Dollar Tree and Supercuts. M.I.N.E.'s student clinic sells bargain massages.

One of the few independently owned massage schools in the area, M.I.N.E. offers two programs: 600 hours to become a massage therapist and 800 hours to become a clinical massage therapist. Students begin seeing clients in their second trimester of study, and "there's always someone out front in case a student needs help," says Helen Rose, the school's owner.

M.I.N.E.'s student clinic is decorated in earth tones and smells lovely, a mix of aromatherapy oils and French fries. A young student named Shannon shows me to the massage room, which sports five tables divided by thick curtains that guarantee privacy (if not soundproofing).

I apologize for the errant bikini wax on my thighs, and then Shannon gives me an hour-long Swedish massage ($35). Her hands are really hot, which is a bonus. She's going to be amazing at this someday. As she's still a student, she's a little nervous, and I don't feel transformed the way I have after some $100 spa massages in Las Vegas. But she definitely gets a few knots out of my back, and I feel looser. Afterward she makes a point of asking what she could have done better or differently. And I realize that the best way to take advantage of any student clinic is to speak up in the middle of the service. Good students are eager to follow instruction, and they value feedback.

Bottom line: For bargain hunters with muscle aches, M.I.N.E.'s student clinic offers a surprise oasis in a weary shopping center.

Blaine: The School

30 West St., Boston (617-266-2661)
www.blainebeautyschools.com
Mon., 10 am–3:30 pm; Tue.–Thu., 10 am–8:30 pm; Fri., 9 am–3:30 pm.

Owned and operated by the Fortune 1000 Regis Corporation, Blaine: The School runs student beauty clinics at each of its six locations: Boston, Framingham, Malden, Hyannis, Lowell and Waltham. Their services run the beauty gamut—hair care, skin care, makeup and nails. Students start working in the clinic after 250 hours of study, which includes the requisite time practicing on each other.

Top The more advanced Elizabeth Grady students administer professional-quality facials at half the professional price.

Right Hour-long sessions at Somerville's Massage Institute of New England range from $35 to $45—unless, of course, you're a doctor, nurse, student, policeman, firefighter, teacher or senior. Then they're $5 cheaper.

I opt for the Boston Blaine, conveniently located in the middle of Downtown Crossing. Blaine looks like a full-fledged salon. The walls are lined with backlit before-and-after pictures of clinic clients, along with the name of the student designer. A haircut is the most obvious deal—five bucks for a shampoo, cut and blow-dry. I notice on the Web site that the price used to be $14. I rationalize that I need some male input for this story and ask my friend Steve if he'd be willing to get a haircut in my stead, while I get a less committal manicure. He's game. We book a 7:30 appointment on a Tuesday night and arrive on time, but our students don't come to fetch us until almost 8.

My manicure ($10) is weird. It reminds me of a sixth-grade slumber party. The student cosmetologist seats me at a cafeteria table in the corner of the clinic. She tells me to pick a color, but offers me only four choices: clear, two variations of fire engine red, and the one I pick, a pink reminiscent of Pepto-Bismol. She goes at my nails with a drugstore emery board for a while, then pokes at my cuticles as if trying to provoke them.

A student-friend of hers, bearing snack food, asks if it's OK to join us. Sure, I say. I don't mention the sign on the wall next to us, which explicitly prohibits eating in the manicure area. The friend sits down and starts popping M&Ms into my stylist's mouth, one by one. When the stylist returns her attention to my nails, her friend opens and savors a bag of Sun Chips. "I love S Chips," she says. "I wish that every time I ate one S Chip, another one would create itself inside the b At that point a supervisor approaches, points to the p scription on the wall and asks if they can read. I sque the urge to apologize.

While entertaining, a manicure is not the best dea Blaine. There are plenty of professional nail care sal in Boston that offer better manicures for 10 bucks.

My friend Steve fares better with his haircut—N clippers on the side and scissors on top—complair only about how long it takes (about an hour.) His s burns are slightly uneven, but he doesn't notice that u the next day.

"It wasn't the best haircut I've ever had, but it fine," he says. "I got exactly what I asked for, except uneven sideburns. Given that I paid five bucks, I'd s got a great deal. It's a terrific value for a third of the p I usually pay."

Bottom line: If you don't have complicated hair, the ahead and get it styled at Blaine. Five bucks is a fant price for a shampoo, let alone a cut and blow-dry. But the manicure.

Shampoo, cut and blow-dry: $5
Highlights: starts at $45
Hair color: starts at $20
Manicure: $10

Top: Coloring services and highlights at Blaine start out at a reasonable $20. But those with simple styling needs get the real deal—$5 for a shampoo, cut and blow-dry.

Left: Students at Blaine have a real, uh, head for hair care. They also offer inexpensive makeup, skin care and manicure services.

Spa manicure (with hand and arm massage): $6
Extensions: $4 per track/glued, $7 per track/sewn

Empire Beauty Schools (formerly the Learning Institute of Beauty Sciences)

167 Boylston St., Boston (617-424-6565)
www.empire.edu
Mon. and Fri., 9 am–4 pm; Tue.–Thu., 9 am–4 pm and 5:30–9:30 pm

Empire runs 37 beauty schools in nine states, offering courses in cosmetology, hairstyling and nail technology. The Boston location is prime, just around the corner from the expensive salons of Newbury Street. Empire students must complete 500 hours of study before they can start working in the clinic.

Empire's clinic is smaller and less flashy than Blaine's, and the equipment looks a little old. But the students seem confident, calm and hiply coiffed. Yoshi, the young woman assigned to me, is involved in a national styling competition, and she's already employed as an assistant at the Highlights salon on Newbury Street. Yoshi seats me in a reclining chair by the window, tilts me back, asks "how skinny," waxes my eyebrows in four easy rips ($5) and offers a hand mirror so I can see the results. The glass falls out of the mirror and hits me in the face. In the end, my nose hurts a little, but my eyebrows are shaped and even.

Bottom line: Your head is in good hands with Empire's talented students. But watch out for that mirror!

Eyebrow wax: $5
Shampoo, cut and basic style finish: $8

The Elizabeth Grady Schools of Esthetics and Massage

222 Boston Ave., Medford (781-960-0126)
www.elizabethgrady.com/schools
Massage: Tue., 9:15 and 10:45 am; Thu., 1:30 and 3 pm
Esthetics: Fri., 9:30 am–12 pm

Best-known for their 40-some salons across Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Connecticut, the Elizabeth Grady Companies also run the School of Esthetics, the School of Massage and the School of Makeup Artistry, all housed in a sunny, 30,000-square-foot loft space with swank walnut hardwood floors. With all due respect to Medford, it doesn't feel like Medford.

The school doesn't advertise its student clinic—in part because owner John Walsh believes in the value of word-of-mouth recommendations, and in part because the clinic competes with the company's salons, which are franchised. But those lucky enough to find it are in for a great deal. All the skin-care services in the student clinic cost half what they would in an Elizabeth Grady salon, and massages cost significantly less than that. The clinic offers most of the services that the salons offer, with the exceptions of microderm abrasion and Brazilian bikini waxes. "We require advanced training for that," says Alison Giammarco, manager of the clinic and the school store. "We feel very strongly that someone has to be very experienced before they do that."

Length of study varies according to the program, but in general students have completed about two-thirds of their education before they start working in the clinic. "At that point their level of knowledge is very high and they know all the treatments," Giammarco says.

I try a massage ($25) and a facial ($35).

As at other student clinics, portable dividers separate the massage tables, offering some privacy. A student named Chrissy talks me through a Swedish massage, explaining now and then why she's rubbing where she's rubbing and asking for input. She's good. The hot towels she wraps around my feet help make up for the loft being kind of chilly.

The skin care room is similar to the one at Catherine Hinds, with multiple tables of clients. (At both places, clients change into terry-cloth wraps in the ladies' room, so they don't have to get naked in front of each other.)

My skin care clinician is Colleen, a smart go-getter who already has a salon job lined up on Newbury Street. It's not exactly a calming experience, this facial, because the 72-year-old lady next to me is cracking up the whole room with stories of her heyday as a dancer in Spain. "I don't get to dance much anymore," the lady complains. "My husband dances like a white man."

I receive a treatment as skillful and thorough as I've received in any salon. Colleen's enthusiastic, at the ready with a scientific explanation for everything she puts on my face. She charms me for good when she says, "I'd like to give you a foot massage while your pomegranate mask takes effect." We have a winner.

Bottom line: Elizabeth Grady's students are smart, skilled and eager to pamper you on the cheap. Let them!

One-hour Swedish body massage: $25
Deep pore-cleansing facial: $35
Bikini wax: $12.50
Back wax: $30

And in the end...

Braving an unknown stylist, massage therapist or esthetician is a gamble even in a fancy spa; agreeing to be a student's guinea pig is even riskier. To paraphrase Forrest Gump, you never know whom you're gonna get. But if you're watching your budget, it's a good risk. All in all, I'd say my quest has been a success. Six clinics later I'm cleaner, less hairy and more educated and relaxed than I was a week ago. And I can still afford to pay my cable bill this month. IB free to ski

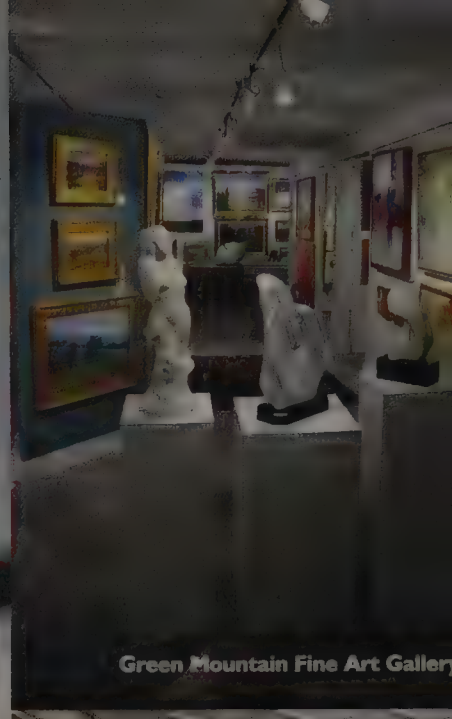
BY LESLIE P. KILGORE



ing winds, slushy streets, a (further) lack of parking, and hat infamous icy wind: Yes, winter in Boston brings the itter. But with some of the country's top ski resorts just a w hours away, it's easy to turn the season's hazards to our advantage. The only question is where to go. This ear, we headed for the hills and checked out three ski owns to suit three different budgets—from bargain base- ent to splurge. Check your bank statement, and plan the ip that fits your speed.

SKI LUXE

Stowe Mountain, Stowe, Vt.
3½ hours from Boston
Lift ticket: $76 per day
www.gostowe.com

ocals say it's the last ski resort of its kind: rustic and uaint, yet refined and classic. For a weekend in the lap of uxury, this is the place. With world-class spas, fine-dining estaurants, art galleries and upscale boutiques, there are enty of temptations off the slopes, too.

igh-end B&Bs, slopeside condos and five-star resorts are l worth splurging on here. For an on-mountain stay, the rand-spanking-new ski-in/ski-out Mountain Cabins at pruce Peak come equipped with 3,000 square feet of menities—stainless steel and granite kitchens, secluded aster-bedroom suites, stone fireplaces, floor-to-ceiling indows, private terraces with outdoor hot tubs, a oncierge and a valet service that takes care of all the messy ttle details (including cleaning the snow off your skis at he end of the day).

If you prefer a spot off the mountain, with a more tradi- onal feel in a modern setting, consider the Stone Hill Inn. wned and operated by husband and wife Hap and Amy rdan, Stone Hill does the B&B thing right; no creaky ors, thin walls or lack of privacy in this home. Each of e nine suites in the Jordans' custom-built house features king-sized bed with Pima sateen sheets, plush down com- rters and pillows, a two-sided gas fireplace that opens to e bedroom and bathroom with a two-person, fireside cuzzi, Egyptian cotton towels and a flat-screen TV. uests eat breakfast (three homemade choices daily) by ndlelight; hors d'oeuvres are served at 5 pm every evening; and there are drinks and acks available around the clock in the kitchen. High-speed Internet access, a game om, a movie library, an outdoor hot tub, tobogganing and snowshoeing top off the en- rtainment options at this retreat. There's nothing these innkeepers haven't thought of help guests feel at home.

Mind and body types may go for the Stoweflake Resort and Spa, family-owned and perated for more than 40 years but renovated fairly recently. With a 50,000-square- ot spa, exercise facilities, a slew of fitness classes, a year-round outdoor pool and hot b, and two fine-dining restaurants and bars, Stoweflake offers everything the health- nscious type could crave. After a workout on the slopes, try the caviar facial, the Ver- ont maple sugar body polish or the Green Mountain coffee body scrub, and then relax the hydrotherapy waterfalls or the Hungarian mineral pool.

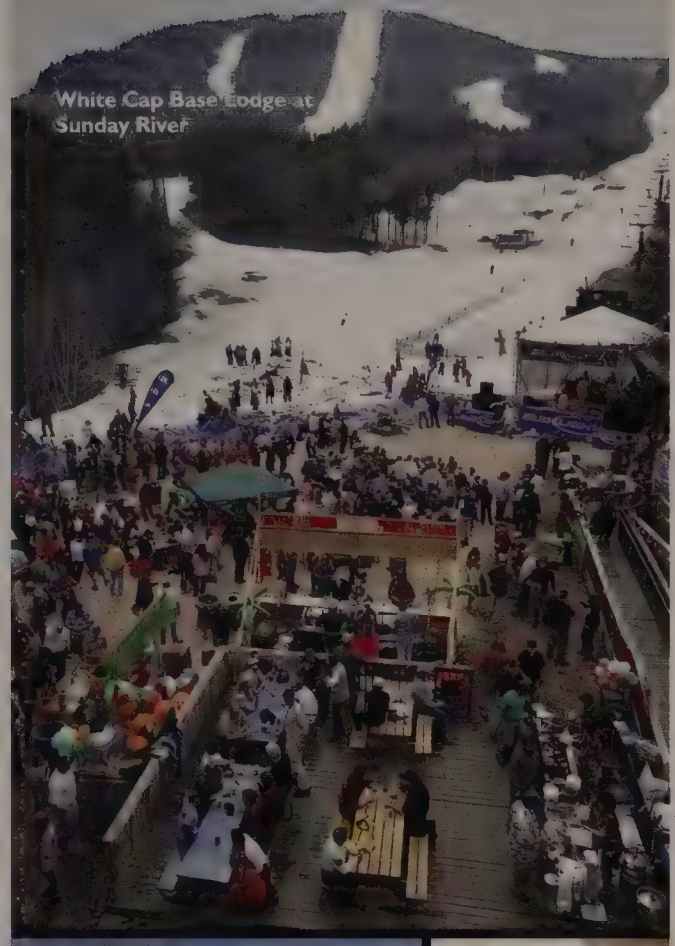
rched in your typical 19th-century Vermont farmhouse, Michael's on the Hill is all out fresh, locally grown and raised products: Switzerland native Michael Kloeti serves althful and seasonal creations. Dine by candlelight on homemade bread and sweet itter, local organic greens with maple-balsamic dressing or Vermont blue cheese, white ot bisque, Hudson Valley foie gras, Vermont honey–glazed pork chops or Maine lob- er bouillabaisse while listening to a harp or piano player, and you'll have the perfect ay to stay cozy on a cold night.

More-adventurous diners can opt for the Cliff House, located at the top of the moun- in. (Seriously—diners take the gondola to get to this fine-dining spot. Don't worry, ankets are included.) The Saturday-night Summit Series throughout the winter pre- nts a weekly menu that highlights local artisans and fresh seasonal ingredients from ermont farms. And after the meal, the Rusty Nail Ice Bar (yes, the structure is literally ade of ice) is where it's at for a late-night cocktail. Don't leave without doing a shot om one of the 12-foot luges.



Stuff to Do

For a day away from the slopes, take a tour of downtown and the surrounding area. There's plenty of shopping, with boutiques such as Stowe Kitchen, Bath and Linens selling glassware, cookware, bath products, blankets, duvets, furniture and knick-knacks you won't find in the city. Well Heeled offers designer shoes at non-urban prices. (Be sure to check out the clearance barn in the back.) And there are art galleries galore, with spots like the Green Mountain Fine Art Gallery, the West Branch Gallery & Sculpture Park and the Little River Hotglass Studio, which specializes in blown-glass pieces.

KEEPIN' IT REAL

Sunday River, Bethel, Maine
3 hours from Boston
www.sundayriver.com

Sunday River is known for one thing: snow. Many say it's some of the best this side of the Mississippi. With their special snowmaking formula, it's also consistent, which is why East Coasters keep coming back. Expect fewer nightlife and dining options than at Stowe, but there's still plenty to keep you busy—at an affordable price. If quality snow and seemingly never-ending choices of terrain (with more than 150 trails) are your priority, look no further.

Lodging

Slopeside is where it's at when you stay at the River. And for affordable rooms with all the amenities, including game rooms, outdoor heated pools and hot tubs, restaurants and bars, the Grand Summit Hotel and the Jordan Grand Hotel are the best bets. Located at opposite ends of the resort, the Summit is close to the base area, while Jordan is more secluded. Those who like to travel with friends should check out Sunday River's special Ski & Stay packages, which offer groups ski-in/ski-out condos that sleep 3-8 people, with lift tickets and lessons included.

Dining/Nightlife

Planning a night out that keeps you close to home base is easy enough, thanks to a free trolley that takes guests to any resort restaurant, bar, condo or hotel on the mountain. The Phoenix offers fine dining upstairs ("fine" by rural Maine standards, mind you), with a lively après bar below featuring live music and an outdoor fire ring to keep you toasty whilst stargazing. The Shipyard Brew Haus offers pub food and late-night concerts, and for your hyperactive side, a lit tubing hill, a terrain park and ice skating right outside its door.

Farther afield, Rooster's Roadhouse is a chef-owned restaurant and pub housed in a comfy barn on the way to town, serving Maine seafood, steaks and Italian, with burgers and snacks in the bar. The Suds Pub (below the Sudbury Inn, which offers fine dining) is a local favorite and worth the drive on a Saturday night for its acoustic shows and ski-bum flavor.

Stuff to Do

The great outdoors is the focus in Bethel. If you've never taken a spin on a dog sled, now's your chance; New England Dog Sledding offers one-, two- and three-hour tours of the area. Or take a sleigh ride with your honey over the river and through the woods, offered on Saturdays and holidays at the Bethel Inn Resort.

When your nose, fingers and toes have had enough of the cold, check out the Indoor Adventure Center in Bethel, which has an indoor climbing wall, laser tag, a game room and more. Or go the more mellow route with some antiques shopping downtown.

ON THE CHEAP

For those seeking a ski area with some New England charm, a trip to Cannon Mountain is like stepping back to a time when strip malls and fast-food chains didn't exist. But "quaint" doesn't have to be code for "tourist-gouging rip-off"; Cannon has enough amenities at the right price for the thinnest of wallets.

Lodging

The Cannon Mountain View Lodge is too much fun: good rooms, good food, good music, great people. Owners Ray and Yvonne Fredricksen make everyone feel welcome, with home-cooked meals in their dining room, live music in their newly renovated bar and an outdoor hot tub and fire pit where visitors linger late into the night. The cliché is actually true here: Their cozy and simple rooms keep people coming back year after year. The Hillwinds Lodge also offers inexpensive rooms that are clean and simple—perfect for those on a tight budget who just need a place to crash after a long day outside.

Dining/Nightlife

Even if you don't stay at the Cannon Mountain View, its restaurant/bar, Above the Notch, is the place to eat. Live music, friendly locals and a vibrant crowd keep this a happening place in the middle of rural New Hampshire. More cheap eats can be found at the Dutch Treat, a family-owned restaurant serving large portions of homemade Dutch and American dishes at reasonable prices. For a more refined atmosphere that still satisfies a limited budget, Rosa Flamingo's offers American and Italian fare in a rustic mountain setting.

As for breakfast, Polly's Pancake Parlor is a must before you leave Franconia. Located in an old carriage house overlooking the valley, this spot serves up homemade pancakes and waffles, with an overwhelming choice of batters, toppings and locally made syrups. The pancake stacks come six-deep, but they're served three at a time so you can eat 'em while they're hot and fresh.

Stuff to Do

Your activity options in Franconia fall pretty solidly in the skiing and snowboarding categories. But not far away (a one-hour drive), North Conway has some of the best outlet shopping in New England. It's got all the big names—Nike, the Gap, J. Crew, Polo—but the L.L. Bean Factory Store could be a day trip in itself; with all the money you've saved on lodging, why not pick up a new sweater or fleece? Before you head back to the city, be sure to visit the Lift, the bar at the base lodge, to sip a hot toddy, enjoy live music and swap mountain-conquering stories. After all, what's a ski trip on any budget without a little embellishment? iB

AN INTIMATE YOGA DATE WITH BABY-TO-BE

Portia Brockway, who teaches yoga classes in Cambridge, has two CDs—Low to the Ground and Prenatal Yoga—available at Seven Stars in Cambridge, or through www.yogainharvardsquare.com.

Yoga, with its graceful, contemplative rhythms and spirit, is one of the very few forms of movement or exercise that's well suited to pregnancy. In her CDs, Portia Brockway elaborates on gentle postures that help you "turn your awareness inward, to your baby's home, uniting you with this new being entering into your life." "Breathe," she intones, in her piquant and soothing voice. "Rock the baby, feel the greatness of the belly." As Brockway emphasizes "the contemplation and invigoration of body and mind," she leads you through a "mango visualization," noting the beautiful similarity of that fruit and the shape of the womb. Against a background of surf and birdsong, she talks you through something called Ujjayi breathing and relaxation exercises, describing various gentle stretching, tipping and tilting movements. Squatting helps to expand the cervix and birth canal, and is useful during birth itself. Instead of Salute to the Sun, the object of veneration is now directed To the Child, inviting him or her "into a healthful world full of breath and life and beauty." Lucky baby! Low to the Ground invites "infinity and receptivity" through Upward Boat ground-gripping stretches and through the expressive Lion Pose, with its liberating silent Roar!

THE ISLAND OF EERIE VISITATIONS

Nantucket Ghosts*, by Blue Balliett, tells uncanny tales of Island ectoplasms.

There must be a little grey realtor in the sky somewhere, wearing a shawl and a bun, maintaining the long-term residency of Nantucketers who now take the form of ghosts. These 44 stories have a lot in common, at once thrillingly hair-on-neck-raising and (mostly) comforting. The currently living Nantucket dwellers hear knockings and heavy footsteps, or simply experience atmospheric intimations of immortality. Latches on doors click open and shut, seemingly on their own, and even sturdier locks unlock themselves mysteriously. Breezelessly, doors just fly open. Old Island families, Barren and Coffin (hmm… there's a name) seem to have 99-plus-year leases, as old-fashioned ladies or men in fedoras make visitations, mostly benign, but sometimes aggressive and terrifying. As if tolerating occasional roommates living in century-connecting synchronicity, the narrators don't call the cops even when very solid-seeming ghosts give downstairs parties full of laughter and clanki dishes, or move hefty items from here to there. Or when sterling-silver rings just appear out nowhere. Houseguests and kids receive visits, too. Two kids, 4 and 5, report an imaginary little frie named Mary Abby, who'd come to play. Later, a hidden gravestone reveals that Mary Abby Swain h died at age 2—in 1837.

REVIEW

PASTA PRIMA

La Brace joins the North End's family of reliable Italian restaurants.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY MICHAEL IVINS

Pity the poor Boston tourist. She asks at her hotel where to find good Italian food. The concierge, lacking a ready answer, gives a boost to his favorite spot. The answer might well be "the North End"—a fair response, for there is much enjoyable eating in Boston's North End. But upon arriving at this animated neighborhood, the problem of choosing remains. Restaurants line Salem, Hanover and North streets, and the crossroads that run between them. They start with down-to-earth spaghetti joints, with red sauce and garlic bread reminiscent of the days when Anthony used to run through the neighborhood for his Prince spaghetti. They soar to the heights of near-haute cuisine.

You might think the last thing this neighborhood needs is a new restaurant. On the other hand, this is America, land of opportunity, where talent, energy, hard work and entrepreneurial spirit have their rewards. Enter La Brace, one of the newest additions to the crowded North End restaurant scene, and a worthy destination for hungry aficionados of creatively conceived and professionally executed Italian food.

Braised pork belly and grilled pork tenderloin with escarole pie

La Brace (pronounced bra-chay), a word that means grill in colloquial Italian, occupies a small storefront on Salem Street, a few doors down from Cross Street. Its tripartite dinner menu, with about 10 antipasti, 10 pasta dishes and 10 grilled main courses, includes four house specials for good measure. For lunch, a more abbreviated menu offers six salads and antipasti, six pastas and about half a dozen grilled items. As I salivated over the menu, the server brought a basket of hard-crusted Iggy's baguettes and a two-compartment dish of extra virgin olive oil and balsamic vinegar. I avoided the temptation to blunt my appetite by overdosing on this superb combination and instead ordered the calamari duetto ($13), a creative and provocative rendering cooked two ways. On one side of the plate, the ringlets and tentacles, lightly breaded and flash-fried to a pale golden-brown color, resulted in a light, tasty treat, especially when dipped in a small bowl of arrabbiata sauce. It was spicy and hot, yet not overpowering, with subtle overtones of red bell peppers. On the other side of the plate, a half-dozen squid bodies, stuffed with pork sausage and sautéed in olive oil, reminded me of Portuguese pork and clams. As in that dish, the combination of pork and seafood proved felicitous.

Continuing its triumph in the denizens-of-the-deep department, La Brace's grilled baby octopus ($12) brought three tiny octopi lined up on a rectangular white plate, alternating with dollops of parsnip purée, gooseberries and exquisite grilled baby artichokes. The tiny bodies and gangly tentacles of these miniature creatures, resilient yet tender, delighted the eye as well as the palate. The Caesar salad ($7) came with a blue-cheese dressing in which the sharpness of the cheese contributed a savory tang usually derived from a more traditional ingredient of Caesar dressing, mustard. Two plump white anchovies, with restrained saltiness and a pleasantly fishy flavor, crowned this generous mound of fresh greens, which was large enough to share.

Any new restaurant hoping to succeed in the North End must be strong in the pasta department. La Brace met that challenge with high scores. Its house-made chicken ravioli ($13), silky-soft pasta pillows filled with deftly herbed ground chicken, came bathed in a delicious sauce of roasted peppers, chunks of rich, smoky-sweet pancetta, full-flavored fava beans and well-simmered tomatoes. The sauce, reminiscent of the arrabbia but without the heat, made this a tru memorable dish. Tagliolini amatricia ($18) combined long strands of hous made, al dente pasta with a mello tomato sauce made rich and flavorful large chunks of sweet and salty sear pancetta that gave it a slightly smoky n ance. Finally among the pastas, t risotto of the day—made with sea sca lops the night I ordered it (hence the st $22 price)—was at once creamy a slightly firm to the bite, with a beautif golden color thanks to saffron, which al contributed to its distinctive flavor a aroma. The velvety texture and sweet fl vor of the five large, succulent scallo took full advantage of the luxurious pla form presented by the risotto.

Of La Brace's main courses at dinn the pork "two ways" ($26), consisting braised pork belly and grilled pork tend loin, was my favorite. The rich, mea pork belly proved delectable and satisf ing, while the medium-rare tenderlo combined resilience with tenderness a more good pork flavor. T accompaniment of escaro pie in a browned past crust offset the pleasa bitterness of the escaro with the sweetness raisins and the unique fl vor and texture of pi nuts. A more unusual ma course, braised Denv lamb ribs ($25), must' been a bit of whimsy the part of the chef, for seemed to have about much in common with t ditional Italian cuisine Denver has with Domo ossola. The meat, fall-off-the-bone tend turned out to be quite tasty, possessing pronounced sweetness that went well w the bland but aromatic lavender bre pudding accompanying it. The second g nish of dry, tough mustard greens, on t other hand, had no redeeming features.

A more conventional Italian offeri osso buco ($26), one of the "house s cials," brought a meaty veal sha braised tender with onions, carrots a tomatoes. To my taste, the meat and v ables hadn't been simmered together eld enough to hold flavors in the way at makes this dish particularly tantaliz-g, and it lacked the typical fillip of gre-olata, the combination of minced garlic, rsley and lemon zest that traditionally hances this preparation. In contrast, La race's steak tips ($12 at lunch), a most -Italian offering, were a triumph. Large nks of rare, tender, juicy beef on a destal of broccoli, red and yellow cherry matoes, green olives and slices of red ions, the preparation combined protein rdiness with light, refreshing vegeta-es. The accompanying ricotta cake—an traordinary creation of buffalo ricotta d morsels of pancetta that's wrapped in osciutto, battered with panko bread-umbs and pan-fried to a dark-golden own—may have been the crowning ory of the kitchen on my three visits. ne size of a hockey puck, the cake osely resembled a croque monsieur but th an Italian accent. The fresh basil leaf top was a nice touch.

In contrast with many North End staurants, La Brace also offers desserts 8). The cannoli, an impeccably fresh, isp pastry shell filled with mildly sweet, eamy ricotta filling, set a standard by hich I will judge all future cannolis. he tiramisu, a huge goblet of mildly veet, liqueur-laced mascarpone cheese, me with hefty lady fingers vertically ar-yed around the periphery of the confec-on. Crème brûlée, mellow and luscious ith a caramelized shell, provided the third variation on the custard theme. La Brace's wines included a very good house Chianti at $8 a glass, and a less enjoyable 2004 Valle Reale, Vigue Nuovo Montepulciano d'Abruzzi, which I found a bit coarse.

Physically, the restaurant has an engaging simplicity. The ground-floor dining room accommodates almost 40 diners at small tables for two, four and six, and a downstairs function room holds another 40, for private parties and overflow from the dining room on weekends. The stainless steel kitchen is visible through a plate-glass window, its sill lined with bright red tomatoes. Absorbent ivory linen napkins lend a note of luxury, as do delicate wineglasses with large bowls, in which even the least expensive house wine is served.

During my three visits, I fell under the spell of La Brace, influenced not a little by the charming story that lies behind it. Its co-owner, Gail LaRocca, worked for more than a dozen years as a waitress at Massimino's, a reliable eatery on the edge of the North End near the Charlestown bridge. Inspired by her father, a Neapolitan lover of food, she has now opened her own restaurant to pursue her dream. She recruited a young chef, Mark Fredette, who developed and burnished his skills under the masterful Marissa Iocco (of Mare fame). Fredette's first-rate performance at La Brace demonstrates the efficacy of that tutelage and vindicates LaRocca's faith in his dedication and talent. iB

Two Roads Diverge?

Schlow and Myers taking different paths, but their relationship's still intact

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Restaurateurs Christopher Myers and Michael Schlow

Forget the rumors—just because chef Michael Schlow is taking a solo path to open Alta Strada doesn't mean that he and longtime friend and business partner Christopher Myers have reached a fork in the road.

"We aren't breaking up," says Schlow, who co-owns Radius, Via Matta and Great Bay with Myers and Esti Parsons. "I think it's perfectly fine to be partners on some things and not to be on others." Alta Strada, slated to open in several months in the former Figs space in Wellesley, translates as "high road" in Italian, but Schlow will continue to travel the "crazy road"—Via Matta—with Myers. Myers himself is off on a tasty tangent with a new project: He's planning to open a Chinese restaurant with fiancée Joanne Chang, chef/owner of Flour.

What's ahead for the Fed

Look for The Federalist at XV Beacon Hotel to reposition itself dramatically by about February or March. Partner Jamie Mammano has been working with executive chef Dave Hutton to devise a more accessible menu that eases up on the over-the-top richness—and prices—that have defined the restaurant since it first opened. The rather stuffy décor will be less formal: The dining room's dark brown walls have been repainted a light beige. Service, too, will loosen up; expect a more "personable" style of service modeled after Mistral. Besides the track record of Mistral and the immediate and ongoing success of both Teatro and Sorellina, Mammano and his team have the advantage of economies of scale: Mistral pastry chef Shane Gray is now in charge of desserts at all four restaurants.

Raising the Dbar?

Yes, we know Dorchester is teetering on the brink of becoming a dining destination. But Dbar owner Brian Piccini may be taking the "Hot Dot" scene to the tipping point by hiring a new executive chef with truly impressive credentials: Christopher Coombs, most recently at Troquet, has a background that includes stints at Blue Ginger and Toppers at the Wauwinet on Nantucket and 18 months at The Inn at Little Washington in Virginia, where Coombs worked with owner/executive chef Patrick O'Connell to help prepare dinners served at the White House. Coombs' new menu features dishes such as maple leaf duck confit over shallot-fig risotto, bourbon-dijon pork tenderloin with fig and apple chutney, and grilled yellowfin tuna with pink peppercorns. Just as impressive: All entrées are under $20. But wait, there's more—a Sunday brunch that includes the alluring "drunk and naked lobster omelet." How can you possibly resist?

Pitch, pitch, pitch…

A worthy cause: Jake's BBQ in Waltham is donating half of the money raised by sales of its teriyaki wings to the Red Sox to help defray the cost of acquiring Japanese pitching star Daisuke Matsuzaka. Let's do the math. Wings with grilled pineapple: $7.95. Winning bid for the right to negotiate with Matsuzaka: $51 million. Nickel-and-dime promotion, shameless.

Where's the puzzle?

Conundrum in Harvard Square is now serving lunch. There's nothing particularly mysterious about the appeal of chef Eric Wernsing's pumpkin bisque with cinnamon crème fraîche or braised short rib with horseradish potato purée. It's just that cryptic name. IB

The golden revolution

One man. One beer. One vision.

Before 1842 beer was dark and cloudy, until visionary brewmaster Josef Groll created the world's first golden beer in Plzen, Czech. This revolutionary breakthrough received great acclaim from beer enthusiasts across the globe, spawning a world of golden imitations and inspiring a new tradition of beer appreciation.

Today, beer appreciation lies within a respect for the beverage.
For its rich history and colorful culture.
For its many flavors and multiple aromas.
For the manner in which it's poured, and the glassware in which it's served.

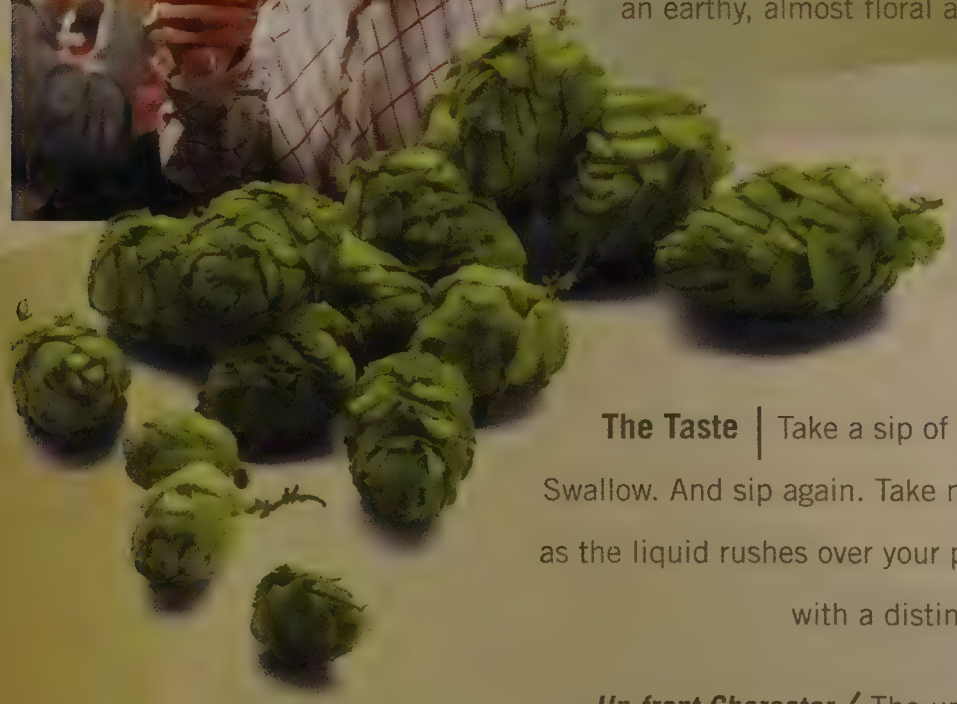
Today, true beer appreciation is an understanding of the way beer was,
and the way beer is meant to be.

Discover how beer is meant to taste.

Experience the true character of a Pilsner beer

The Pre-taste Appearance | Gently pour the beer into a Pilsner glass. Hold the glass to the light and take notice of the brew's color and clarity. A true Pilsner should have a pale, golden hue and a consistent stream of carbonation making its way to the rim of the glass.

The Aroma | Swish the beer to release the liquid's natural aromas and effervescences. Then take three short sniffs. The aroma should be noticeably sharp. A true Pilsner will have an earthy, almost floral aroma, with sweet hints of honeysuckle.



Saaz hops

The Taste | Take a sip of the beer. Swish it lightly around your mouth. Swallow. And sip again. Take note of the sensations and flavors you experience as the liquid rushes over your palate. Overall, the taste of a true Pilsner is crisp with a distinct bitterness and clean finish.

Up-front Character / The up-front character is the initial taste sensation present on the tip of the tongue. It is often a delicate interplay of sweet and salty tasting notes. Pilsner Urquell's up-front is slightly sweet, with a honey-nut flavor and malty, toasted-grain character.

Moravian barley

Mid-mouth Character / The mid-mouth character is the taste sensation experienced on the rear of the tongue. The notes distinguished here are often bitter and complement the up-front character. Pilsner Urquell's mid-mouth is mildly bitter, with a baked-bread taste and subtle sweetness.

Body / The body of a beer is achieved through the richness and quality of the malts. You can assess the beer's body by the way it feels in your mouth. A brew of milky texture can be described as having a full-body, while a brew with a consistency slightly thicker than water can be considered light-bodied. Pilsner Urquell is best characterized as medium-bodied.

Balance / A balanced beer contains all aroma and taste sensations at desirable proportions; no one sensation overpowers the others. Pilsner Urquell's sharp bitterness is balanced by a warm, caramel sweetness.

Finish / Finish is the aftertaste as it relates to bitterness and other taste sensations that linger. Balanced bitterness and astringency contribute to a nice clean finish. Pilsner Urquell finishes crisp, with a sharp and distinct bitterness embraced by caramelized sweetness.

The Post-taste Appearance | After taking your first taste, take another look. The streaming bubbles should still be present, and lacing should be developing along the side of the glass.

These are the methods of the discerning, those who celebrate how beer is meant to taste, those with a higher appreciation for the experience and the craft, those who choose to savor Pilsner Urquell.

PLACE ON A MAP

SOME SEE A PLACE IN HISTORY

Using the finest local ingredients and a revolutionary brewing technique, our visionary brewmaster discovered what many describe as the authentic, true taste of beer— full-flavored and pleasantly bittersweet. It was a discovery that put the town of Plzen on the map, and the world's first golden beer in bars around the globe.

Museums and Galleries: The Art of Giving

Ready to take a step up from those framed posters you've had since college, but not quite ready for Sotheby's? Get thee to the annual School of the Museum of Fine Arts' December Sale. With more than 800 established and emerging artists, including SMFA alumni, faculty, affiliated artists and current students selling their works, you're bound to find something that'll brighten up that empty spot above the couch. What's more, there are steals to be had here throughout the six-day event, with new pieces rotated in daily—more than 4,000 paintings, prints, photographs, drawings, sculpture, ceramics and jewelry. Proceeds benefit SMFA scholarships, so you're giving a boost to tomorrow's Matisses and Picassos. School of the Museum of Fine Arts, 230 The Fenway, Boston (617-369-3718). www.smfa.edu. Wed.- Thu., 12-8 pm; Fri.-Mon., 12-6 pm. Free. —LPK

BOSTON'S BEST 2006
THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN

Music: Hip-Hoppin' in the Hub

Boston's always been a rock-'n'-roll town, and we've had big-name homegrown tale like Aerosmith, Boston, J. Geils Band and the Dropkick Murphys to prove it. But rock's not the only game in town: The local hip-hop scene is alive, well and on dis Dec. 9 at the Middle East for the 2006 Boston Winter Hip Hop Fest. The show, ho by Ricky Roman with music by DJ On & On, features performances by some of the best local talent, including Insight, Termanology (recently featured in XXL magazi Letia Larok (recently featured in these pages), Elementa Zazen and more. The festi ities kick off at 8 pm, and it might be your last chance to catch some of these guys performing before they're summoned to the blinged-out world of mainstream hip-hop We're looking for one of them to grab the title of "Most Successful MC to Make It o Beantown" from Bobby Brown. Middle East, 472 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-931-20 www.mideastclub.com. 8 pm. $12. —RL

FRI.–THU./DEC. 8–14

Books: A Store Is Born

Who says bookworms don't know how to party? Borders opens its Back Bay location with a bang this month, hosting a five-day grand-opening celebration that features book readings and signings by the likes of Tom Perrotta, Nathaniel Philbrick, Bill Brett, Gregory Maguire, Joan Collins, Jenna Blum and Jennifer Whitaker, to name just a few. Musical performers include Guster, Sonja Kitchell, Ben Taylor, classical guitarist Aaron Larget-Caplen and the Red Velvet Slide, among others. The festivities also include happenings for the wee ones: Characters from Boston Ballet's Nutcracker will appear, along with Madeline and a few familiar Disney faces. The Radio City Rockettes are coming, too, to promote their new book, A Dance Through Time. Borders Back Bay, 511 Boylston St., Boston (617-236-1444). Free. www.bordersstores.com. Check Web site for complete schedule of events. —LPK

Museums and Galleries: Open Sesame

The day has come. The Institute of Contemporary Art finally opens the doors to its new waterfront digs on Dec. 10 with a public celebration. During the ICA's 12-hour "community day," visitors can tour the new 65,000-square-foot building, view the museum's first permanent collection, see the inaugural exhibitions, listen to live music, DJs and a variety of performances in the outdoor tent and the 325-seat theater, and participate in a variety of family-oriented activities—all free of charge. Don't miss Super Vision, which explores how modern ways of seeing influenced the works of 27 international artists. As the only museum in Boston devoted entirely to contemporary art (and the first new museum to be built here in 100 years), the new spot will put Boston on the contemporary art and architecture maps. So get there on opening day to see Boston make history. Institute of Contemporary Art, 100 Northern Ave., Boston (617-478-3100). www.icaboston.org. 9 am-9 pm. Free. —LPK

A Craig Up

The blond James Bond raises the 007 franchise to new heights in Casino Royale.

BY SEAN BURNS

I gave up on James Bond about halfway through the long-running series' last attempt at a makeover, 1995's desultory GoldenEye. As I recall, there was some sort of noisy, bombastic tank battle going on, and Pierce Brosnan's 007 momentarily stopped fighting for his life—just long enough to straighten his tie and offer a knowing wink to the audience. I distinctly remember turning to a friend and saying something to the effect of: "Well, if he can't be bothered to be engaged with this material, I see no reason why I should care."

This is hardly a problem during Casino Royale, a bruising, extremely satisfying back-to-basics reboot for the ailing franchise. Rediscovering the character's roots via the first of Ian Fleming's Bond novels (previously adapted into a misguided comedy starring Peter Sellers, David Niven and Woody Allen back in 1967), does have, that most of the replacement 007s lacked, is Sean Connery's slightly seedy air of casual cruelty and menace.

We're watching that famous Bond persona in the process of its creation, and as the film wears on we can see Craig refining his performance into something increasingly colder and more elegant, never quite assuming full Bond-age until the film's deliciously crowd-pleasing final line.

Big baddie Le Chiffre (Mads Mikkelsen) runs a crooked banking operation for terrorist cells, making a fortune for himself by manipulating the stock market thanks to his foreknowledge of their impending attacks. After our novice agent disrupts one of his big-money schemes, Le Chiffre finds himself owing millions of dollars to a machete-wielding Ugandan warlord (played by Jim Jarmusch favorite Issach De Bankolé), and his only hope of keeping his head lies in a high-stakes poker game at the title establishment.

Daniel Craig's James Bond is less placidly debonair than past incarnations.

Dispatched by Judi Dench's wonderfully persnickety M to bankrupt Le Chiffre at the tables, Bond arrives with tart treasury agent Vesper Lynd (the stunning Eva Green) keeping an eye on Her Majesty's bankroll. In addition to bringing his best card game, the freshman spy also needs to learn how to wear his first tuxedo, and figure out exactly which way he likes his vodka martinis prepared.

But the fun of Casino Royale is the way it takes all the tried-and-true elements we've grown to love about these silly pictures, and finds fresh ways to view them all through a rougher, more contemporary lens. Le Chiffre is less overwrought than traditional Bond villains, yet still has a bum eye that drips the occasional bloody tear. Keeping with the grand tradition of superpowered henchmen, Bond tussles with an African parkour champ during an early, vertigo-inducing set piece. As expected, the movie is packed with beautiful women and exotic locales, and exhibits an almost pornographic eye for expensive automobiles. Though doubtlessly hardened by prolonged exposure to both 24 and the Jason Bourne movies, these filmmakers thankfully haven't forgotten that, at heart, Bond movies are male leisure fantasies.

Director Martin Campbell also helmed the aforementioned GoldenEye, so I guess the second time is a charm for this journeyman. He's wisely scaled back the action sequences from "ludicrous" to "implausible." (It's a big difference.) Stuart Baird's brisk editing lends a jagged, forceful immediacy, even as some of the plot mechanics become unnecessarily muddled during the film's overlong homestretch, when Bond briefly considers ditching MI-6 for a life less ruthless in Vesper Lynd's loving arms. No points for guessing how that one turns out.

But when all is said and done, Daniel Craig emerges as the brutish, brokenhearted 007 for our times, appropriately tougher and sadder than the preceding incarnations.

Welcome back, Mr. Bond. It's been too long. iB

Casino Royale opens with a stark, black-and-white precredits sequence, depicting our wet-behind-the-years MI-6 agent earning his double-0 stripes with a couple of nasty, cold-blooded assassinations.

(When one of the targets asks how his friend died, Bond replies: "Not well." He isn't kidding.)

Right away, everything about this 007 feels a lot leaner and a good deal meaner than we've come to expect from the series in recent decades. The close-quartered violence is messy and leaves a mark. Bond himself is rough around the edges, hardly the Teflon, debonair superhero we've all grown so bored with lately.

This is 007's Batman Begins, so don't look for any invisible cars, bad double-entendres or conveniently talkative supervillains angling for world domination here, as this stripped-down prequel deliberately avoids the bloated campiness that bogged down Brosnan's efforts. Most important, James Bond feels not just human, but vital again, thanks in no small part to a bravura performance from the controversial Daniel Craig.

A fine actor best known for his extraordinary work in Layer Cake, The Mother and Munich, Craig is a dark-spirited, thuggish figure with startling ice-blue eyes. Built like a boxer and unveiled, as it were, walking up the beach à la Ursula Andress in Dr. No, he at first appears nothing at all like the international man of mystery we've come to know from 20-odd movies. But what he

Dixie Chicks: Shut Up & Sing ★★★½

This candid, surprisingly moving documentary from directors Barbara Kopple and Cecilia Peck begins with the hugely successful country music trio's public relations disaster back in 2003, when lead singer Natalie Maines made an offhand, uncharitable comment about George W. Bush at a London concert, and inadvertently ignited a political firestorm. A good deal more thoughtful and considered than one might expect from the cloddish advertising campaign, the film explores some unsettling issues of mass media consolidation and manipulation, and it's refreshingly frank about the carefully researched target-marketing and branding strategies that are required to be successful in the entertainment industry today. The picture is also an intimate portrait of the Chicks themselves, with plenty of behind-the-scenes footage of Maines, Martie Maguire and Emily Robison coping with their new status as national pariahs. Banned from country radio, labeled "Saddam's Angels" during an amusing public feud with Toby Keith, and performing in spite of a seriously scary Dallas death threat, these three remarkable women stick together, stick to their guns and, for all intents and purposes, start their careers over from scratch. Shut Up & Sing is an inspiring, genuinely patriotic story. (In the suburbs.)

Fast Food Nation ★★★

Writer-director Richard Linklater has teamed up with Eric Schlosser for a loose-limbed, big-screen adaptation of the latter's 2001 nonfiction best-seller. The result is a curious, not-unsatisfying hybrid—a mix of statistics, editorializing and slightly sketchy drama trying valiantly to cover a massive cross-section of American culture by zeroing in on a Colorado town that's kept afloat by countless franchise joints and one ominous meatpacking plant. Dispatched to investigate an overabundance of feces in his chain's burgers, Greg Kinnear's marketing honcho sits down with folks representing every interest along the fast food chain. This is a slender dram thread, but it offers just enough thrust for Sla and Before Sunset director Linklater to do what best at: collecting a series of wide-ranging, ph sophical discussions. The storyline drifts at ti but it's ultimately anchored by fine performa from Catalina Sandino Moreno and Ashley Jo son, as well as a show-stopping cameo from B Willis. Criticized in some quarters for being les cendiary than Schlosser's book, Fast Food Na isn't so much a diatribe as it is a conversation, it's one well worth having. (At Harvard Square.

For Your Consideration ★½

It's been a long time since Waiting for Guffman, director Christopher Guest's once disarming s improvised mockumentaries have been growi bit thinner and lazier with every passing ins ment. For Your Consideration marks a dour dead for Guest's creative partnership with Eugene L as well as repertory troupe members Cathe O'Hara, Harry Shearer, Michael McKean Parker Posey. This tiresome Tinseltown tell-all behind the scenes of a perfectly dreadful-lool independent film entitled Home for Purim, sco plenty of unpleasant cheap shots once the Ho wood hype machine starts touting the never cast as Oscar bait. The gags are mostly inside b ball, aimed at folks familiar with the movie biz, for Guest's odd belief that Jewishness is inhere hilarious. This is a sour, mean-spirited movie a small, selfish people, wringing uncomfort laughs from their endless humiliation. It's ir that, after all these years, Guest has finally made movie that Waiting for Guffman's detractors wro accused it of being: an ugly mockery of medium ents, ridiculing them for being foolish enoug have dreams. Please note: Half a star has been subtracted thanks to Robin Williams' unfunny, offensive voice-over work as all the "ethnic" animals. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Let's Go to Prison ★★½

This wildly uneven, often disturbing farce, adapted from a nonfiction book by counterculture writer Jim Hogshire and sketch-comedy legend Bob Odenkirk, throws a broad, deceptively lowbrow comedic frame over what's basically a collection of ugly facts and unpleasant statistics about our broken-down penal system. Dax Shephard stars as an addled, layabout career criminal seeking revenge on the judge who first put him away at the tender age of 8. As that particular benchwarmer died long ago, our hero must settle for tormenting his rival's spoiled son (Arrested Development's resident scene-stealer Will Arnett) and eventually landing the loudmouth jerk in jail. Plot mechanics are certainly not this picture's strong suit, but the film's working from a healthy zone of outrage. Absurdly fixated on male terror regarding anal penetration, this is an extremely filthy, sometimes funny, sometimes creepy movie. What's most subversive is the romantic subplot between Arnett and jailhouse top dog Chi McBride. It's hard to think of another major studio release that would even endorse an interracial same-sex union, let alone one that would cheer them to live happily ever after, drinking toilet wine. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Little Children ★★★½

Kate Winslet gives a performance of astonishing fearlessness and grace in this poignant adaptation of Belmont-based author Tom Perrotta's barbed novel of suburban malaise. Mapping out a moneyed neighborhood's playground rituals with an Edith Wharton–esque attention to propriety amongst proud parents, Little Children chronicles an unlikely erotic connection between Winslet's bumbling, frumpy, desperately unhappy housewife and Patrick Wilson's handsome, henpecked stay-at-home dad. Director Todd Field (who cowrote the screenplay with Perrotta) was mentored by the late Stanley Kubrick, and here he emulates the master's stylized, hermetically chilly eye-of-God perspective—complete with a sardonic, third-person narration straight out of 1975's Barry Lyndon. But every time the picture begins to feel a bit too pleased with itself, these actors find a moment of truth so stark and uncomfortable, you'll be grateful for the camera's respectful distance. Former Bad News Bear Jackie Earle Haley brings both terror and pathos to the role of a sex offender paroled into a town full of overprotective moms and emasculated dads, searching for a scapegoat. This overambitious movie sometimes gets a bit too big for its britches, but Winslet bravely plumbs the depths of selfishness and sadness, exposing ugly, unspoken emotions that are all too human. (Opens Oct. 20 at Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall and in the suburbs.)

Story turns out to be a stodgy, brutally dull affair reminiscent of all those ponderous retro-biblical epics we'd all assumed that pictures like The Passion and Martin Scorsese's Last Temptation of Christ, had already rendered obsolete. Whale Rider star Keisha Castle-Hughes is given little to do beyond beaming beatifically as the Virgin Mary, embarking on the B.C. era's last, and certainly least eventful, road trip alongside nice-guy husband Joseph (Oscar Isaac). We keep cross-cutting to a similar, far shtickier journey undertaken by three wisecracking Wise Men, who dispense such bad comic relief it's a wonder they weren't played by Billy Crystal, Robin Williams and Whoopi Goldberg in drag. Director Catherine Hardwicke previously helmed the offensive, exploitative, borderline-kiddie-porn saga Thirteen, and she brings the same bleached-color, quick-cut, hand-held aesthetic to ancient Bethlehem, with disastrous results. Look elsewhere if you're seeking the genuine spiritual yearning of pictures like Gibson's or Scorsese's. This one is all about the Benjamins. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Queen ★★★

A good deal more amusing and sympathetic than you might expect, director Stephen Frears' catty, behind-closed-doors saga of royal protocol in the wake of Princess Diana's death boasts an impeccably precise performance by Helen Mirren, a model of restraint and understatement. As HRM Elizabeth II, Mirren is the embodiment of stiff-upper-lip British reserve, allowing us only fleeting glimpses of her inner turmoil while the monarchy is rocked by public outrage during that weird week of hysterical, worldwide grieving. Michael Sheen does a fine job as Prime Minister "Call Me Tony" Blair, attempting to usher in an era of "regular guy" modernity and correctly gauging that Her Majesty's private, dignified responses will simply not cut the mustard in such sad, unprecedented circumstances. Peter Morgan's screenplay sneaks questions about tradition, obsolescence and celebrity worship in between the very funny lines, and James Cromwell steals the show with an unfiltered take on Prince Philip. The Queen stumbles over some unfortunate symbolism involving a 14-point stag on the grounds of Balmoral, but Mirren's sterling self-control saves even the soppiest scenes. My goodness, the things this lady can convey with a single eyebrow! (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Shortbus ★★★★

Although already notorious on the festival circuit for its no-holds-barred approach to onscreen sex scenes (and yes, they are indeed as graphic and unsimulated as anything you'll see in any porn flick), writer-director John Cameron Mitchell's warm, wondrous Shortbus is hardly a scummy object of titillation for the raincoat crowd. It's instead a funny, randy, absolutely delightful romantic comedy set in a New York City still staggering under the long shadow of 9/11. Sook-Yin Lee leads a cast of brave, boldly exposed newcomers, each sorting through messy relationship entanglements and converging on the afterhours club from which the movie takes its title. Gay, straight, fat, skinny, old, young, ugly and beautiful—all are welcome, and all are embraced by the movie's boundless generosity and compassion. It's no accident that the picture begins with a closeup on the Statue of Liberty, as Mitchell positions sexual freedom and exploration as our inalienable rights. (There's a rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner" that must be seen to be believed.) More revolutionary than the boundary-pushing hardcore content is Shortbus' joyful exuberance and empathy. The biggest organ on display here is the movie's heart. (At Kendall Square.)

Stranger Than Fiction ★

Proving once again that there's no craze Hollywood can't co-opt and dumb down, those wildly successful brain-bending metamovies of screenwriter Charlie Kaufman have been lobotomized for mass consumption with Stranger Than Fiction. Zach Helm's script is a riff on Kaufman's Adaptation, reconfigured for a fourth-grade reading level. Will Ferrell stars as a miserable IRS auditor sleepwalking through life, until one day when he hears the voice of an omniscient narrator (Emma Thompson) foreshadow his imminent demise. Turns out Ferrell is just other character in blocked novelist Thompson's est tome, and the film follows his attempts to the reclusive author and plead for his life. How rell ended up inhabiting the same universe as creator is just one of many tricky questions neve dressed, as the movie is far more interested in a tine, unlikely love story between stuffy Ferrell Maggie Gyllenhaal's anarchist bakery owner. Ta ing down his manic comic energy until there's n ing left on screen, Ferrell barely registers as the upon hero. Director Marc Forster makes e wrong decision imaginable, giving the mov sparse, ugly look and a listless pace. (At Bo Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Denzel Washington comes to the aid of Paula Patton in Déjà Vu, directed by Tony Scott

Volver ★★★

The title translates as "To Return," a concept echoes in several sneaky ways throughout Almodóvar's relaxed, casually complex movie. lope Cruz has never been better than she is in twisted homage to Spanish telenovelas and Do Sirk melodramas. The plot is too complex an side-down to even begin trying to explain, but you'll be most struck by is Almodóvar's sheer abashed adoration of women. The movie has a feminine glow to it. Almost all of the scenes place while Pedro's women are preparing styling each other's hair or somehow nurturin another. There's something almost primal Almodóvar's vision of females as healers and givers—their community's life force. Though overplotted and overlong, this is a very sweet love letter to the kindness and resilience of everywhere. (At Kendall Square and West New

Catch Her Drift

Aimee Mann tickles her funny bone in the Christmas spirit.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Whatever happened to Christmas?" Aimee Mann sings in that Jimmy Webb holiday tune. "Whatever happened to the faces or the glow?" Mann didn't forget: She taps memories of classic songs and childhood feelings on her new CD One More Drifter in the Snow, tempering melancholy with a dash of humor.

"The real touchstones for me were the Peanuts cartoon and Johnny Mathis, Peggy Lee and Dean Martin," says the Virginia native who launched her career in Boston with the new-wave band 'Til Tuesday. "Johnny Mathis' Christmas album was the record I used to hear every Christmas, and that's my favorite, so we used that for a lot of inspiration.

Nostalgia rules on Mann's new album, One More Drifter In the Snow.

"We wanted to hearken back to the '40s and '50s, those borderline corny arrangements," says Mann, who enlisted a mainly Boston-bred cast anchored by bassist Paul Bryan (who produced the disc), guitarist Duke Levine and drummer Jay Bellerose. "A lot of the arrangements were laugh-out funny, like 'Winter Wonderland' with the cloppy-horse section.

"But we also talked about what Christmas was like when we were kids," the singer-songwriter says from her current home in L.A. "What I remember is waking up in the middle of the night, and the windows are dark and it's quiet. This great day is coming, and Santa Claus is downstairs leaving presents under the tree. It's funny, but also very mysterious. We wanted to capture a bit of that."

So the album includes cozy chestnuts such as "The Christmas Song" and "White Christmas," the giddy "You're a Mean One, Mr. Grinch" (from the Dr. Seuss cartoon How the Grinch Stole Christmas) and the carol "God Rest Ye Merry Gentlemen."

"You're a Mean One, Mr. Grinch" makes a delightful duet with Grant Lee Phillips in devilish narrator mode. "One of the things about Grant—besides being a great singer—that people don't necessarily know is that he's superfunny and does a lot of impressions," Mann says of Phillips, an expected guest when she brings her First Annual Christmas Show to Berklee Dec. 17. "He can do a great Willie Nelson."

Of course, Willie Nelson has his own Christmas album, as does seemingly every major act who could use the seasonal cash. But Mann, who operates her own indie label Super Ego, says, "I don't imagine a Christmas record is an instant huge seller. To me, it's a specialty or novelty item."

Indeed, Mann hasn't been one to court commercial success since 'Til Tuesday's mid-'80s heyday with the hit "Voices Carry," but she gained her most high-profile recognition as a solo artist through her soundtrack work for the 1999 film Magnolia.

"As an artist, you keep moving forward, and there's no predicting what people will buy," Mann says. "In this day and age, there's no predicting that people will buy an actual record."

After a few messy label relationships, she says, Super Ego is doing well. "People can tell you to do a certain kind of song or record all they want, but for me, it either happens or it doesn't. When people tell me to write a song for a movie, sometimes I can do it, sometimes I can't. It's never going to happen because somebody else wants a payday."

Following her 2005 disc, The Forgotten Arm, a concept album that mixed the story of a boxer's life with a failed love affair, Mann took a hiatus from writing, although she and Bryan co-penned "Calling on Mary" for the Christmas CD.

"[That song] allowed us to be as Capra-esque as we wanted, to have the sentimental plot of the misanthrope that has this moment of clarity," she says, noting, "I didn't write anything for about a year. I was touring and didn't feel like writing at all. And in the last week, I've written three songs, so I'm back in the writing mode."

Fans can expect both Christmas songs and her originals at Berklee, part of an eight-city tour. "In a live context, there's a limited amount of Christmas music that people want," Mann says. "We want it to be like a Christmas party."

She attended Berklee back when it was mostly a jazz school, and that's reflected in some of the arrangements for her Christmas record. "The jazz element, learning about jazz, prepared me for pop music in a really nice way," she says.

What might seem a more unusual element at Berklee will be the host, Saturday Night Live comic Fred Armisen, whom Mann and husband Michael Penn met at the L.A. club Largo.

"Having comedy almost primes people to listen to the lyrics more closely," says Mann, who forged a similar mix on tours she dubbed Acoustic Vaudeville. "It goes together in a way that's unexpected and gives people a fuller experience." iB

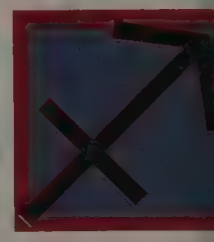
rockie horoscope

DECEMBER 6 – 19, 2006 BY ROCKIE GARDINE



SAGITTARIUS NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

If you read for all the other signs, you'll get a better idea of the impact you're having on them and their holidays. Everyone (not just lucky you) is adjusting to the influx of planets in Sagittarius and learning how that massive amount of energy can manifest in their lives. It may take a few days, even weeks, to notice how this power surge is affecting you personally, so be sure to track the forecast for your rising sign as well as your sun sign. Since lovable Venus moves to Capricorn on Dec. 10, romance should be your first priority.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Sooner than you think—the evening of Dec. 10, to be specific—you might discover that you're a much sweeter, kinder, even a more attractive person than you are today. That's because seductive, sociable and eminently amenable Venus enters Capricorn on that date. Until then, what's a romantic realist to do but wait in the wings or, better still, hang with folks who simply want to have fun? The more of them that are comedic Centaurs and stage-stealing Lions, the easier you'll be distracted. Maybe you'll meet a potential lover, too.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Probably no other sign was as affected by the recent full moon as you. Why? Because it's the only lunation that takes place in your Gemini house of romance and creative projects, an area that hasn't seen a lot of activity lately. Spring is usually a more conducive time for singing Aquarian love songs. However, it wouldn't hurt to focus during the holidays on those things that fill your heart and lighten your spirit. Meanwhile, Saturn turning retrograde should put partnership problems on the back burner for the next four months.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

As if the holidays weren't stressful enough, Fish are being encouraged to think far outside their comfort zones, courtesy of the crowd of free-wheeling, freedom-loving planets in Sagittarius—all six of them! Some planets are encouraging you to visit faraway places or to take courses in arcane subjects. Some are manipulating your career choices or putting pressure on senior members of your family. If necessary, feel free to yell your head off if you get mad enough, and to put plans into motion for your next big adventure.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

The pace picks up while your courageous Mars ruler travels through adventurous Sagittarius, a trip it hasn't taken since January 2005. The current visit lasts from Dec. 5 to mid-January. It's not enough time to make a long-lasting impression, but enough to get some ventures underway. Primary among them is a chance to be involved with a money-making enterprise that arises when Mars merges with prosperous Jupiter around Dec. 11 in the part of your chart that connects to other people's money. Very interesting.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Money might not be your chief concern this holiday season, but you and your loved ones won't be able to ignore the fact that your Venus ruler is about to reveal what you truly want and how much you fear getting it. Trepidation, greed, jealousy, revenge—an entire sackful of gripping emotions could be released when Pluto in your Sagittarius house of financial affairs embraces the goddess. High drama for sure, but thankfully short-lived; Venus shifts into pragmatic, earth-bound Capricorn on Dec. 10.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

After spending nine long weeks in Scorpio, your Mercury ruler finally shifts into Sagittarius on Dec. 7. As this transit is significantly shorter (less than three weeks), make sure you follow through on every opportunity to connect meaningfully with the folks you meet during this time. Sin there are so many planets (i.e., people) in your marriage house vying for your attention, you might not allow sufficient time for each to showcase their unique assets. Seriously, this much partnership potential is a rarity; mak the time.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

While other signs figure out how to get more time off arou the holidays, Moon children will find they have more work this month than usual. That's because so many planets are moving into your Sagittarius house of services rendered. If along the way, you wind up with an adorable puppy or kitten, relax. The relationship between you and your pet is the sort of stuff covered by the sixth house of your solar chart, along with paying off a debt or seeing a health professional before the new deductible kicks in.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

This week the winds of change can throw you somewhat o course as you attempt to make the necessary adjustments Most of those will take place at home, among the holiday decorations and nonstop family requests. However, becau Saturn in your sign turns inward on Dec. 5, retrograde fo the next four months, there's a chance that the proud, sh Lion will retire to its den and hide its golden luster until spring. Conversely, any doubts you have about yourself (Saturn sows fear and loathing) could be put to rest for t duration.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Spreading yourself thin during the holiday season might be as difficult as it sounds. Despite efforts to limit your party-going, there's a convergence of planetary energies the zone that deals with coming and going and hanging Short-distance travel may be more appealing this year th the long-distance kind, particularly after your Mercury r hooks up with other planets in high-stepping Sagittarius Wordmeisters: Take a bow when clever Mercury teams up with wise Jupiter around Dec. 10.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

While many will be busy with friends and family during next few weeks, others will be hauling in the shekels. Or not money per se, then the things it will buy. You can't h the fact that this time of year the net worth of your asse increases, as does the importance of your value system. Something you took for granted two weeks ago may suddenly seem very precious. However, in the midst of t pretty picture, there lurks a green-eyed monster. No ma whether it belongs to a relative or a neighbor, the little insists on being dealt with.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

The last thing a Scorpio needs to hear is that there's anc fit of jealousy in the works. Some may feel it's simply th deep, undying love bubbling to the surface; others migh the annual conjunction of romantic, artistic Venus with Pluto coruler as a license to act out in the most dramati manner (short of murder) they can get away with. This the season of forgiveness, as well as wretched excess, wh push the envelope while you can? By the way, with so m planets in Sagittarius, there's much money to be made.

IMMORTAL IMPERSONAL

Piss Off

This is directed toward the gentleman who was relieving himself near the Stony Brook T stop last Saturday night: Dude, it's almost winter. The leaves have fallen off the trees! Next time you have to pee, you might want to find more seasonally appropriate camouflage.

—Walking With Disgust

een the Light

the people who own the castle on orway in Jamaica Plain: I was ginally writing to ask that you stop insanity. Your house is a htmarish eyesore regardless of the son, and then when you started orating in early November, I was y, very afraid. But now that you've e completely insane in the inescent department, I'm writing ask that you keep going. Every ht as I drive home from work, I see t you've added another piece of aculous adornment. It brightens at was most likely a shitty day at office.

Bedazzled

ckass, Party of Two hostess at a popular restaurant in Boston area, I'm appalled at the nber of people who have no nners and zero common sense. en you come through the door and ile and say hello and ask how you today, have the common courtesy at least say "Hi" back. Don't bark number of your party at me and e me nasty looks. I only make nimum wage, plus tips. Speaking of ich, no, it's not OK to leave a 5 cent tip. I don't expect you to make all talk or tell me your life story, I do expect to be treated like a man being and not a piece of crap, ich by the way you are. And finally, nd your children. A restaurant isn't playground, and I seriously doubt let them make such a mess at ne. I've seen food hurled FEET ay from tables; pigs aren't even t messy. Too bad they don't teach quette. You could sure use some.

Hostess With the Mostess

is the Season et you last year at the Snow Ball. were hanging around the Santa oth and drinking a vodka tonic. We only talked for a few minutes but I haven't forgotten your smile.

—Still Waiting

We Don't Want to Wait in Vain for Your Food

Dear Cambridge food-seller (you know who you are): Why do you suck so much? If you're going to offer crappy service, Corky-slow cashiers and diarrhea-inducing rotisserie chicken, couldn't you at least charge a fair price? Your olive oil pricing is even higher than Whole Foods', for Bob Marley's sake! Like a patchouli-scented Hotel California, you draw people in with your alcohol license, but you refuse to let them leave. If it's not your cashiers taking out their resentments by choosing to type each item's bar code instead of scanning it, it's the demanding bag-lady woman who hogs the shortest line with her questions and then doesn't buy anything. For the sake of all the people who've aged years in your line, and the forgotten, nameless others who've become unswept dust in it, please clean up your act.

—Hungry and Waiting

Escape Claus

Retail stores of Boston: Enough with the Christmas music! I mean, I know you're trying to make people feel all jolly and generous and inspire them to wear out their credit cards buying gifts for friends and family, because that's what the season is all about, right? But I felt like the guy in that famous stolen Munch painting when I heard the first strains of that drippy, jazzed-up Christmas soundtrack while shopping for underwear in a department store—three weeks before I'd even thought about buying my Thanksgiving turkey. What's wrong with waiting to finish one holiday before jumping on the next? I can't even begin to imagine the psychological toll it takes on the stores' poor employees, who must endure that endless loop of "Little Drummer Boy," etc., all day long, day in and day out, in what the retail industry has seemingly declared the 55-plus days of Christmas. Please, don't make us hate Christmas music in the name of selling more sweaters.

—Carol Condemner

Coffee Talk?

To the friendly stranger who let me leave the checkout line for a run to the coffee aisle in Porter Square on Nov. 22: I actually enjoyed waiting for my turn with the cashier, given your humor and delightful outlook on life. If you want to discuss ideas about how to repair the world over some caffeine, feel free to be in touch.

—rgdfhjg@yahoo.com

Where You Benz?

It was a late Saturday afternoon in October. You were at the Portsmouth Route 1 exit in New Hampshire in a black Mercedes. I gave you two phone numbers and we talked about the winter season. I'm very much interested in the heavy equipment for the winter. I know you read the IMPROPER because it was in your back seat. Please call me soon. The weather will be changing.

—Jeff From Hampton

True Luv

You know you're in love when it's hard to tell if you're asleep or awake, because your dreams and your reality have become one. Baby, the past year has been amazing. You are my home. You are my princess. You are my partner in crime. You are my dreams. And I want you to forever be my reality.

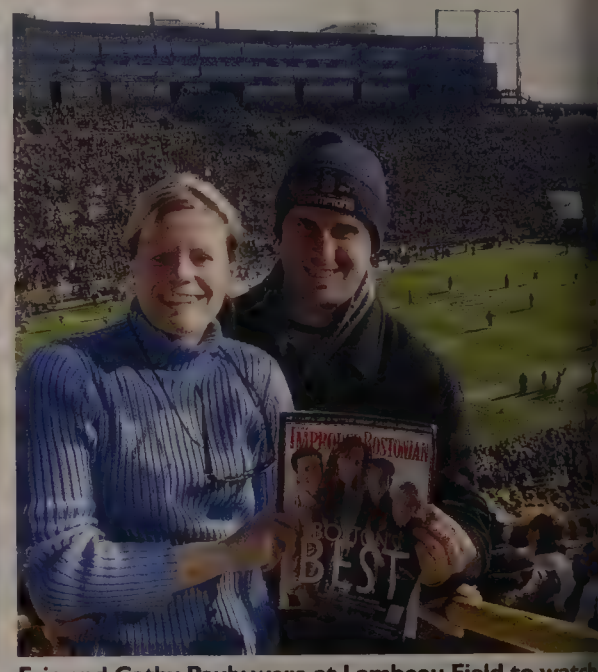
IMPROPER sightings

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Shannon Keenan and Shawn MacMaster were keeping it rural on a recent trip to Toluca, Ill., or as we like to call it: the most boring place the IMPROPER's ever been.

Roxana Von Kraus posed with some Bhutanese friends during Bhutan's Thimphu Tsechu festival. The festival's annual theme song is "Bhutan on the Ritz" by Taco.



Eric and Cathy Pauly were at Lambeau Field to watch the Pats crush Brett Favre's wrist, Aaron Rodgers' le and the state of Wisconsin's collective will to live.

Mike Gregorio (second from the left) celebrated his bachelor party at the Blue Lagoon spa in Grindavik, Iceland, where we're sure that the guys did their best to ensure that the lagoon's water temperature remained nice and tepid.

Raphael and Leonardo Pasquale and Roberto Parseghian were in Campos do Jordão, Brazil, with the IMPROPER and their dog, Scott—who hates Bob Barker with all his might.

Robert Evensen was in Nordkapp, Norway, Europe's northernmost point—unless you count the top of Gheorghe Muresan's head

PAIN IN YOUR BELLY?

Do you have chronic abdominal pain or discomfort that is accompanied by a change in your normal number of bowel movements and/or a change in the form (appearance) of your stool? If so, you might have a medical condition known as Irritable Bowel Syndrome or IBS.

We are looking for men and women with IBS to participate in a clinical research study of an investigational medication for the treatment of the abdominal pain or discomfort associated with IBS.

You may qualify for the study if you meet the following criteria:

- Between the ages of 18 and 79 years;
- Diagnosed or have been diagnosed with IBS as a result of having at least 6 months, not necessarily consecutive, in the preceding 12 months of recurrent symptoms of abdominal discomfort or pain that is:
  - Relieved with defecation,
  - Associated with a change in your typical number of bowel movements when the abdominal pain or discomfort begins, and/or
  - Associated with a change in form (appearance) of stool when the abdominal pain or discomfort begins,
- Experiencing at least moderate abdominal pain or discomfort; and
- Have undergone a flexible sigmoidoscopy or colonoscopy with normal results in the past 3 years, or are willing to undergo these procedures.

All participants in this study will receive study medication, office visits, and study-related medical procedures at no cost.

If you are interested in receiving more information, or to see if you qualify, please contact BIDMC at 617-667-0291.

At the JRI Health event, top row: Michael Kelley, Celine Oringer, Ricardo Rodriguez and Darrin Contini. Bottom row: Michael Wong

VIVE LA DIFFÉRENCE...

It was an ethnically diverse, multiculti, pansexual crowd that gathered high above the financial district in the State Room for the Justice Awards Dinner held by JRI Health, which provides healthcare to homeless adolescents.

Present and accounted for were honorees Dr. Valerie Stone and the honorable Byron Rushing, the delightful Diego Sanchez, überhipster Paul Twitchell, Channel 5 weather hottie David Brown, force of nature Dede Ketover, the smoldering Dr. Michael Wong, ubiquitous party pair Michael Kelley and Ricardo Rodriguez with the gorgeous Celine Oringer and Darrin Contini, and identical twins Greg and Michael Fenton. But just as refreshing as the audience was the brevity of all the blah-blah-blahing and—even more so—the financial pitch from JRI Health's executive director, Douglas Brooks.

"I don't need to ask you for your money," he said. "Instead, I'll ask you to come in and see what we do, and you'll give it to us."

All in all, it was a welcome departure from the usual "Here's your rubbery chicken, now get out your checkbook" school of fundraising.

IT'S FOR THE KIDS...

Everyone who's anyone turned out at the Cyclorama for the Children's Hospital League's annual gala, Endless Possibilities Are in the Bag.

Present and accounted for: emcee Lisa Hughes and her shutterbug husband, Mike Casey, the ubiquitous Lynne and Gary Smith, valet parking mogul Andrew Tuchler and the exquisite Christine, fashion plate Leslee Shupe, lovable Newtonians Lynn Satlof-Karas and her husband, Steve, handsome devil Evan Kushner, dazzling young couple Frank and Kelly Panayotou, legal eagle David Kozol and his fabulous French wife, Anna, and so on and so forth down the list of the city's top philanthropists.

Among the evening's most amusing remarks, a woman trying to convince her friend to buy a raffle ticket said, "For $100, you can save all the children in the world, and maybe win a big TV. Not even your husband could object to that."

ABSOLUTELY FABULOUS...

Anyone who says Boston isn't a fashionable city would have felt foolish at the opening of the Museum of Fine Arts' newest exhibition, Fashion Show: Paris Collections 2006.

The exceedingly chic crowd included the likes of Newbury Street fashionisti Alan and Be Bilzerian with their daughters, Harley and Lana, and son-in-law, Michael Flanagan, real estate babe Alison Boston, the effervescent Clementine Brown (in vintage Balmain), restaurateurs Seth and Megan Woods, nightlife impresario Seth Greenberg squiring the statuesque Casey Suter, brunette fashion plate Barbara Jordan, and Channel 5 glamazon Karen Holmes Ward, with her charming other half, Chip.

In keeping with the evening's theme, there was plenty of air kissing and mutual admiration. Among the exchanges overheard:

"You're all velvety-soft!"

"Well, you're all bugle-beaded!"

And:

"I'm wearing vintage."

"Honey, I am vintage."

At the MFA, top row: the show; Alan and Be Bilzerian. Bottom row: Megan and Seth Woods; Chip and Karen Holmes Ward

A-LISTERS IN THE GUTTER...

The incongruous sight of the city's top socialites wearing rented shoes instead of Jimmy Choos can only mean one thing: Bowl-A-Rama, the annual benefit for Kids Can Cook, held at Kings.

Easily one of the most raucous and entertaining parties of the year, it attracted the likes of cochairs Randi Cutler (with husband Joel) and Maura Connolly (with husband John Egan), the improbably gorgeous Mary-Jean Keaney and her other half, Paul, delightful interior designer Fotene DeMoulas, Arctic blonde heiress Leigh Weatherly, übergroover Shelly Nemirovsky, southern belle Trevania Dudley Henderson, graphic designer Denise Korn, party pair Jean and Laird Robert, the aptly named Susan Doll, bright young things Lori and Matthew Sidman, the naturally sparkling Linda Schwabe, and the three blonde Beths—Dickerson, Madison and Kurtin.

Besides bowling, guests could play Bingo hosted by Bingo Sears of Chanel, spin the Wheel of Fortune with 28 Degrees owner Bill Emery as Pat Sajak, or try their luck at a ring toss for bottles of wine that ranged from the sublime (a vintage French chardonnay) to the melted lollipop (Manischewitz).

The evening's snarkiest remark: When someone said, "Everyone here has been hit with the lucky stick," someone else responded, "Maybe. But no one seems to know how to bowl." IB

OUR LIVES EASIER
BY USING PESTICIDES

BUT WE'RE NOT BITTER

Sauza

TRES GENERACIONES

PERSEVERANCIA · TRADICIÓN · 1873

The beautiful blue agave grows naturally in the Jalisco region of Mexico around the town of Tequila.

That's the way we like it. So that's the way we leave it. Natural. Because that way, our tequila tastes of... well... agave. Pure and simple.

It doesn't taste of pesticides. It doesn't taste of herbicides. And it doesn't have the bitterness that comes from some cheaper production processes, either.

What all this means is that, like all our tequila, Sauza® Tres Generaciones® doesn't require the flavour enhancers that others have to add to mask less pleasant tastes.

Sauza® Tres Generaciones® tastes like tequila should taste. We know you'll enjoy it. That's why you won't find a trace of bitterness.

NEW YEAR'S CHEER

If you read the IMPROPER regularly, you have a pretty good handle on the hottest spots in Boston proper. But do you know where to go for fun in the suburbs? In this, our last issue of the year (and first of '07), we've devoted a healthy chunk of pages to the topic. It's our second feature-story foray into the farther-flung 'burbs, and it focuses on five towns with enough going on—a few things to see, some shopping, decent food and a pub or two—to merit a visit. Throw in a lack of parking hassles and a cheaper bar tab and you've got plenty of motivation to head to the hinterlands.

When it comes to New Year's Eve, though, the city's the place to be. If you're still making plans, check our CityScope calendar for a host of party listings. And if you'll be spending Jan. 1 nursing a hangover and vowing to better yourself in 2007, check out Sam Walters' tips for making those resolutions stick. We promise you'll enter the new year grinning.

A LITTLE SEA-NILE?

It's clear that Ezra doesn't get to the Seaport District very often. Given that he lives in Southie, I find that strange. But his reasons to visit the area ("The It List," Dec. 6) I found even more puzzling. Two reasons to visit the exciting new district are a couple of Starbucks locations and a crab shack? And Jimmy's Harborside Restaurant is listed as a destination that's "alive and well," which is incorrect; those doors closed on New Year's Eve 2005. (The closest destination with a similar name that I could find is Jimmy's Steer House in Arlington.) Lastly, there was no mention of the Seaport Hotel, a four-diamond property that's home to Aura Restaurant and Aura Lounge, both of which have been pleasing palates since 1998.

NUTTY FOR HAZEL

I'm the singer-songwriter who produced the Hazel Mae song. Thank you for the mention in the Dec. 6 issue of the IMPROPER. Being a hick from a small town in Western Mass., I wasn't familiar with your publication until a friend from the North End gave me a copy. I'll make a deal with you: Add a middle-aged, balding, fat guy like myself to next year's "It List," and I'll write a song about you guys, too.

4EVER YOUNG (NOT)

When I read Ezra's column "Ouch, That's Old" (Nov. 22), I realized that I've been kind of an ignorant jerk to some of my friends and peers who are in their 30s. My apologies to the few early 30-somethings I've given a hard time to regarding their age. As someone in his mid-20s, I always felt that 30 was still light years away. Now, it's actually kind of hanging over my head and just aroun the corner. This is my attempt at makin amends.

A graduate of the Art Institute of Boston, Wallengren has published work in the Boston Globe Magazine and Yankee magazine. Highlights from his latest shoot for the IMPROPER included snapping pictures from the roof of the Crane Estate's Great House overlooking the Ipswich shore, learning about the coffee-roasting process at Beverly's Atomic Café and lurking in Concord's Sleepy Hollow Cemetery at dusk. The results can be seen in "Suburban Adventures!" starting on page 38.

Shrimp scampi on linguine

A full bar built for two

Famiglia Territory

The tiny converted shed set on a side street near the Watertown Target only fits about 10 tables (and two stools at the bar), but that suits Shelley Matarazzo just fine. The restaurateur has played the big-dining-room game before—with Figlia, the now-shuttered Newton Centre spot known as much for the deafening din as for the delicious Italian dinners. With Grappa, she says, her mission was to downsize, to revive everything she liked about running a restaurant but none of the negative. "I missed the rapport with customers," she says. "I wanted [Grappa] to be small and fun and manageable—with fewer headaches."

Keeping the food simple was key. In contrast to the upscale northern Italian fare served at Figlia, Grappa's menu is firmly anchored in the familiar food found at old-school Italian eateries. Starters include pasta fagioli ($4.95), fried mozzarella triangles with marinara ($5.95) and rolled eggplant ($6.95), thin-cut fried-eggplant medallions stuffed with mozzarella and ground beef and baked in tomato sauce. For pastas, you'll have to look elsewhere for the likes of squid-ink cappellini with rabbit, truffles and arugula. No trendy ingredients grace this menu—just straightforward dishes like spaghetti and meatballs ($10.95), linguine with clam sauce ($13.95), baked ziti ($13.95) and spaghetti carbonara ($12.95), in a decadent sauce made with heavy cream, egg yolks and Parmesan, and tossed with salty squares of ultra-crisp bacon.

Entrées, likewise, are a testament to unpretentiousness. Offerings include standards like veal Francese (veal scallopini sautéed in lemon, butter and marsala wine; $15.95), veal Parmigiana ($14.95; $13.95 with chicken) and shrimp scampi (sautéed in garlic butter on linguine; $17.95). "I wanted to serve classic comfort food that makes you all warm and fuzzy," says Matarazzo. "The kind that pleases anyone's palate." And anyone's budget: While the main courses at Figlia held steady in the $30–$40 range, Grappa's entrées top out at $18.95. There's a full bar for cocktails, a smartly chosen selection of Italian and California wines (by the glass and the bottle) and carafes of very drinkable house wine for just $15.

"I wanted a laid-back, casual atmosphere—people talking to one another in the dining room," says Matarazzo. To that end, she's done everything possible to promote the comfortable vibe of a neighborhood eatery. The tables are well-spaced, the newly painted walls are cheerily decorated, and on a recent visit—just a week after opening—she was already bopping from table to table chatting with brand-new "regulars." And the homey-sounding street address? It sure can't hurt. Grappa, 71 Elm St., Watertown (617-924-2941). —JH

The Dice Man Cometh

One of the most successful and controversial comedian of the last 20 years, Andrew Dice Clay has sold out Madi son Square Garden multiple times and is permanentl banned from MTV for his profanity-laced appearance a the 1989 Video Music Awards. On Dec. 31, he perform two shows at the Comedy Connection in Faneuil Hall.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: What are your New Year's plans after the show in Boston?

Andrew Dice Clay: Won't have too much going o after. I got two shows to do. That takes a lot out of you IB: What do you enjoy most about Boston after all your years of playing here?

ADC: It's the North End. There's like 10 pastry shop every block, and I'll be there on New Year's, so anythin goes. A lot of guys think about drinking a full keg o New Year's, but all I'll be thinking about is the éclairs.

IB: So the Sox just signed Daisuke Matsuzaka, and he's al ready been given the nickname Dice K? Isn't that a rip-off?

ADC: I actually think that's pretty great for me, dor you? Everyone knows there's only one Dice Man, but he wants to be the Japanese Dice Man, I got no problen IB: Did the spider ever find out what was in Ms. Muffet's bowl?

ADC: You know, I have no idea what you're even tryi to get at asking a stupid question like that....

IB: OK, OK... sorry. Let's talk about your new reality sho

ADC: It's called Dice Undisputed, and it's going to be real reality show, unlike that scripted stuff that's all ov the place today. I won't be hiding anything.

IB: You've done a lot of work with satellite radio. Is that sort of uncensored forum a godsend for a guy like you?

ADC: Definitely. It's where radio had to go. It got to t point where you couldn't say anything. My work with t Howard Stern Show [where Clay had an on-air fight w Stern sidekick Artie Lange] has been a lot of fun.

IB: So who'd win at arm wrestling—you or Artie?

ADC: Every guy I talk to wants to make a big deal about this and it's ridiculous.

IB: But just for fun, who would win?

ADC: That doesn't even make sense.

IB: OK, Dice. Thanks for your time. —Rich Levine

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

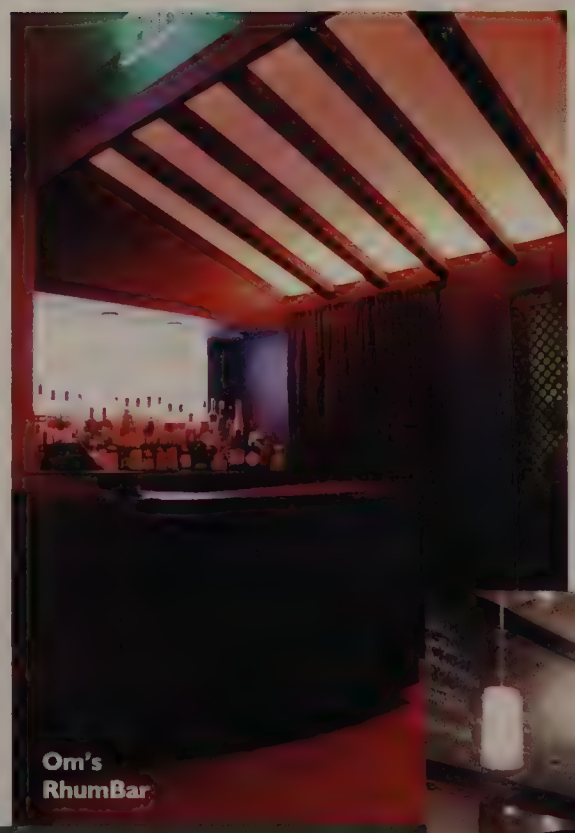
TASTY TIDS

Sage Words

North to South Dining... As Boston says goodbye to 2006, the South End also bids farewell to a staple on its neighborhood dining scene. But although Caffè Umbra—which has served up French and Italian fare courtesy of chef-owner Laura Brennan since 2002—shuts its doors for good on Dec. 30, hungry South Enders won't have to wait long for a replacement: Chef Anthony Susi, the man behind Sage on Prince Street in the North End, has purchased the space and plans to relocate Sage to the Washington Street digs. Word is that Susi will take a few months to renovate the space and should open the new Sage by early March. It's a loss for the Umbra faithful, but a coup for fans of Susi's 28-seat North End eatery. Its new home will be nearly three times the size of the old.

A Doughnut Hole... Meanwhile in Cambridge, local favorite Verna's, which has served up doughnuts from the same Mass. Ave. location for the last 65 years, is going out of business, too. The old-school North Cambridge haunt struggled to stay afloat after a Dunkin' Donuts opened two blocks away about a year ago. No word yet on what might replace the historic shop.



Om's RhumBar

Douzo to Go

Hot off the Press

Ready to RhumBar... Om is burning the midnight oil for its newest late-night venture, and, no, we don't mean it's setting fire to that cheesy '70s Australian rock band. From 12 to 2 am on Friday and Saturday nights, the restaurant now hosts RhumBar in its upstairs lounge. Each week, resident mixologist Clif Travers whips up a few signature rum cocktails while patrons chill on one of the lounge's many couches and bask in all the drunken goodness. Call in advance to reserve your VIP seats. 92 Winthrop St., Cambridge (617-576-2800).

Speed Sushi... Fresh sushi for lunch sounds like a great idea—that is until you waste your whole lunch break waiting around for the rolls to get made. Douzo Japanese Restaurant is looking to make sushi-to-go a little easier—and fresher—with its new Douzo Express takeout area. Set up adjacent to Douzo's Dartmouth Street dining room, Douzo Express is open from 11:30 am to 10:30 pm (making dinnertime takeout a snap, too) and features freshly made rolls, sashimi and select appetizers off the regular menu. 131 Dartmouth St., Boston (617-859-8886). www.douzosushi.com.

Pressed for Success... After nearly two years in business at the Charlestown Navy Yard, Hot off the Press owner Erin Fermoyle was ready to expand and had picked her spot. "I live in Cambridge and absolutely love the city," she says. "I always wanted to bring the business there." Hot off the Press' second location, this one in Central Square, specializes in—you guessed it—pressed sandwiches, along with breakfast treats. Wake up with the Spicy Start (egg, sausage, pepper jack cheese, and spicy mayo), or fuel up midday with the Parma (prosciutto, mozzarella, tomato, basil and garlic EVOO on sourdough). *Mon.-Fri., 7 a.m.-3:30 pm; Sat. and Sun., 8 am-4 pm. 7 Mass. FASH FLASH

Knock It Off

So you want to look red-carpet ready on New Year's eve, but you don't have Nicole Kidman's bank account? No need to go into debt this year for a frock that'll end up champagne-stained: Minis, sequins and sashes can still be had for the holidays—but with a sensible price tag. We hit the mall and found some amazing star styles. For a ladylike lingerie look, we love the black lace netting slip dress, $138 at Max Studio—it reminds us of Charlize Theron at the Golden Globes. For a more graphic approach, Bebe's got a swirl print silk shift, $129, so like Mischa's Marchesa. Or take a walk on the wild side (Jessica Alba looked fierce in a leopard print by Dolce & Gabbana) with an animal-print wrap dress from Wet Seal for just $14.50. Ga-ga f Gucci? Jasmine Sola sells a red-and-black tunic mi $58, like the one Jessica Simpson wore to the M Movie Awards. Versace devotees can channel Lin say Lohan in Guess' teal satin corset dress, $ And if you just can't do without sequins, vi French Connection for black paillettes patterned stripes, $198, much like Kate Hudson's 3.1 Phil Lim. Bebe, Copley Place, 617-267-2323; French C nection, Copley Place, 617-424-1819; Guess, Ca bridgeSide Galleria, 617-621-3432; Jasmine S Shops at the Prudential, 617-578-0550; Max Stu Copley Place, 617-236-1154; Wet Seal, Cambrid Side Galleria, 617-252-0830. —Marni Elyse Katz

IMPROPER REPORTS

Shiny Joules

Nothing says holiday spirit like spending tens of thousands of dollars on your Christmas-tree lights. Here are some of the region's most fabulous displays.

Boston Common

Daily through Jan. 2

Boston Common, Boston

(617-635-4505)

www.cityofboston.gov/parks

In addition to the 42-foot white spruce from Nova Scotia, the Common offers more than 80 other trees decorated with a colorful array of lights for holiday revelers.

Bright Nights at Forest Park

Daily through Jan. 1: Sun.–Thu.; 6-9 pm; Fri., Sat. and holidays, 6–11 pm; $12–$15

Route 83, Springfield (413-733-3800); www.brightnights.org

Springfield's drive-through holiday spectacle is billed as "New England's largest light display." The 12th annual event features a Dr. Seuss–themed display in honor of the children's book author and illustrator, a native Springfielder.

The Castle on the Arborway

61 Arborway, Jamaica Plain

Behold the one-man creation of nearly 250,000 lights that's made national news. Former musician Dominic Luberto spends $10,000 decorating his home with lights and figurines, beginning in mid-October.

Charles Street, Beacon Hill

Daily through Jan. 8

Charles St., Boston (617-227-1922); www.beaconhillonline.com

Residents and business owners of Beacon Hill spend two days decorating their streets with pine garlands and festive ribbons. Take a stroll down gas lamp–lined Charles Street before the 'hood's "un-decorating" days in early January.

Christopher Columbus Park, North End

Commercial Wharf, Atlantic Ave., Boston (617-635-4505)

www.cityofboston.gov/parks

Located on the waterfront, Christopher Columbus Park offers a lighting spectacle of nearly 50,000 bulbs, including 260 feet of trellis covered with lights and pine boughs.

Lynn Fells Parkway and side streets, Saugus

Lynn Fells Parkway, Saugus (781-233-8407)

www.sauguschamber.org

The residents of this neighborhood are rumored to have spent more than $30,000 decorating their homes for the holidays. Over-the-top lighting displays and holiday scenes attract thousands of visitors each year, backing up traffic for miles.

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTIO

Forever Young... To its early evening lineup of live rock shows, the Revolution Rock Bar has added a chance for 9-to-5ers to get into the act. Starting in the new year, DJ Dan hosts the bar's new Karaoke Night every Tuesday from 5 to 8 pm. After all, nothing spells workday stress relief like belting out "Paradise City" onstage. (Axl Rose snake dance encouraged but not required.) 200 High St., Boston (617-261-4200). www.revolutionrockbar.com.

One Woman's Trash... Eva Budavari, a self-described shopaholic, had a closet full of still-tagged high-end duds that had never seen the light of day. So she decided to do something about it; hence Eva B, her new high-end consignment shop in Jamaica Plain. The elegant boutique has already struck a chord, and its racks are filling up fast with fab items like Burberry and Brooks Brothers jackets, Armani skirts, Tahari suits, Betsey Johnson dresses and Chanel scarves, not to mention handbags, shoes and jewelry. 603 Centre St., Jamaica Plain (617-971-0013). www.evabconsignment.com.

Serenity Now... Michael Bryant's search for a spot to house his new relaxation boutique was anything but calming. Thankfully he finally found a good fit in the soothing arms of J.P. Serene Vibes specializes in bath and body products, including aromatherapy, lotions and soaps, as well as an ample collection of relaxation and meditation CDs. Perusing the shelves is calming in itself, with jazz playing in the background and scents like vanilla and mango perfuming the store—all in the name of de-stressing. 638 Centre St., Jamaica Plain (617-524-5552).

Custom Comfort... Susan Fowler has expanded northward to Newbury Street with Down to Basics, her Red Bank, N.J.–based luxury bath and bedding shop. The shop specializes in down comforters, pillows and travel blankets, and Egyptian and pima cotton sheets, in addition to a slew of other luxury home products. Fowler designs her down products and guarantees virtually everything in the store can be custom made or ordered. For a Jersey girl, she seems to be fitting in just fine. 249 Newbury St., Boston (617-267-3696).

IF I DIDN'T NOT DO IT

Never mind O.J. Here's how I might've done a few things, if I did them.

In canceling If I Did It, O.J. Simpson's account of how he "would've" killed his wife and Ron Goldman, Fox honcho Rupert Murdoch called the quasi-confessional an "ill-considered project." And I call Rupert Murdoch a wimp. What's the point of coming up with such an awesome idea if you don't see it through? Luckily, the IMPROPER won't relent to public pressure to suppress my own tales of hypothetical crimes, which I call If I Didn't Not Do It. My lawyers assure me that the phrase "If I Didn't Not Do It" constitutes no admission of guilt, nor should it be construed as such (wink wink!). That said, what follows is my exclusive account of how I might've done a few nefarious things. You know, if I did them.

Farting in a Crowded Elevator

Here's how I'd do it: First, I'd look around and see who else was in the elevator. It's important to get the lay of the land before you allegedly commit a crime. Hopefully there's a fat guy in there, because everyone automatically suspects the fat guy. Me, I always suspect the cute girl, but I'm a pro—I mean, I might be a pro, if I were inclined toward this type of disgusting activity. Anyway, what I'd do is lean to one side a little bit, to make sure I'm dealing with an SBD. (When you're committing a crime, there can't be any sounds of struggle. Or so I've heard.) Once I'd let one fly, I'd pretend not to notice anything was amiss. You've got to let someone else take the lead, either with a nose-wrinkle or a quick sniff followed by a look of surprise. After that, you're golden. Shoot a disgusted glance at the fat guy and subtly move away from him, if that's possible. Get out at the next floor, even if that's not your floor, just to make the point that you find this type of behavior really offensive. And that's how I'd fart in an elevator, if I didn't not do it.

Stealing an Upgraded Drink at Starbucks

If you want a really tasty flavored latte at Starbucks for cheap, all you have to do is order the cheapest drink possible and then head down to the waiting area. You'd think the best time to try this would be during the morning rush, but you'd be wrong—while mornings seem chaotic at Starbucks, the morning crowd are the regulars. These people know how the game is played. They know exactly how long it should take for a venti Eggnog Latte to materialize on the calculatedly funky oval serving platform. But the afternoon brings the J.V. squad, in terms of both the clientele and the baristas. You never know how long it'll take to get your drink, or in what order it'll come out. Furthermore, anyone who needs two shots of espresso at 2 pm won't notice that it's a pretty big coincidence for two consecutive people to order a grande no-whip Peppermint Latte, and for both of those people to be named Milo. So then I say—I mean, I would say, "Yep, Milo, right here," and I'd grab the delicious and expensive coffee drink before its real owner could speak up. In the ensuing confusion, I'd walk out the door with my free Starbucks upgrade, if I didn't not do that.

Pretending to Get a Call on My Cell Phone Every Time I Walk Past a Salvation Army Guy

It's that time of year when the Salvation Army people are everywhere, their bells tolling the signature sound of guilt. There's no way to walk past a Salvation Army bucket without feeling guilty, even if you just stuffed $50 into the last bucket you passed. (Of course you didn't do that, but what if you did?) So, to avoid eye contact or interaction with the bell-ringer, I'd take out my phone just as I walked past. I'd say, "Hello? A bus full of nuns, you say? I'll see you in the E.R., stat. Prepare my lucky scrubs—it sounds like I'm in for a long night of stitching up the Lord's workers." Then I'd hurry past on my real mission, which is to get home in time to watch America's Funniest Trampoline Injuries.

Of course, you could also pull this off by wearing a Bluetooth earpiece and simply pretending to talk to someone. But that would require wearing a Nerdy McNerd dork Bluetooth earpiece within sight of other human beings, and there are some things even I just wouldn't do. IB

BY CHRIS COLLINS

DEAR SANTA

Asking Mr. Claus for some sports wishes

'Tis the season to give thanks for what a wonderful sports town we live in. Of course, there are always a few things that could be improved, which is where my man Santa comes in. So here it goes, Santa. Here are a few of the sporting things I'm looking for under the tree this year:

For Theo Epstein, a local boy through and through, an off-season of truth. He brought a World Series title and parade to Boston in 2004, but he had help. Players from the Dan Duquette Era and even the Lou Gorman Era (Trot Nixon!) were still front and center. It's now time for Theo to earn his legacy, which is winning with his own players.

For Tom Brady, the development of one of his receivers into a bona fide No. 1 wideout. Not to say I feel bad for Mr. America, but Brady is having his best season considering the ham-and-eggers he has catching his passes. Give him one guy, just one guy that will not only get open but catch the damn ball. If you grant this, Santa, I'll guarantee some football in late January and maybe even February.

For Jonathan Papelbon, health. The undisputed MVP of the Sox' pitching staff is a stud. He has what it takes to make it here, which isn't easy (see Matt Clement, Edgar Renteria, etc.). You give him health and I can pretty much guarantee success, maybe even 20 wins.

For Josh Beckett, a better sense of his importance. I don't think he gets it. He has all the talent in the world, maybe more than any pitcher in baseball. He has the fire we love here in town. We just need his head, too.

For Laurence Maroney, 25 carries a game. That's right, Santa; just give him the damn ball. This kid is hip. He knows rap music—he says, "Lil' Wayne is the best guy out there right now." He also knows that coach Belichick has the power to make him a premier back immediately. He's ready.

For Terry Francona, some intestinal fortitude. If Manny Ramirez, or anybody else for that manner, is dogging it, let him know it (and let us know it, too).

For Bruins forward Mark Savard, a little respect. This kid is good. The only problem is that most of Greater New England doesn't know it yet. He's a sleeper star here among some legends with the Patriots and Red Sox.

For Jon Lester, a cancer-free body. Santa, if you have to grant me just one wish and nix the others, this should be it. This is a class kid with a great pitching arm. I really hope to see this kid at the top of his game. He could be a great one.

For Rodney Harrison, a return to the field. It would kill me almost as much as it would kill him if Rodney weren't able to return from his injury to play for the Patriots this year. I'm dreaming of a Super Bowl matchup between the Patriots and Cowboys, with Rodney planting a hit on Terrell Owens' kisser.

For Asante Samuel, a legitimate big-time contract. The Patriots' new shut-down corner is having a great season, and he deserves to be compensated for it.

For Paul Pierce, a new team. That's right, Santa, it's time for Pierce to go elsewhere. It's obvious the Celtics won't be equipped to win during his best days as a Green teamer. Let's make Paul happy, and me, too, and send him to a team that has a shot at winning in this decade.

LET'S MAKE PIERCE HAPPY BY GIVING HIM A TICKET TO A TEAM THAT HAS A SHOT AT WINNING IN THIS DECADE

For Danny Ainge, a ticket out of town. Are you kidding me? I loved Ainge as a player, but he's really goofed with the franchise.

For Drew Bledsoe, retirement. It's time to rest on his laurels. The former Pats and Bills quarterback should hang up his cleats and retire with dignity to be with his kids in Idaho, Nebraska or wherever it is he lives, rather than go play for the Raiders and get sacked 75 times next year.

For me, a trip to the Super Bowl. That's right. This year's Super Bowl is in Miami—so much better than Houston and Jacksonville, a pair of hick towns by comparison. The best part, though, is that I can work while having some sun and fun, all on the company's dime. Priceless.

Santa, I realize I'm asking for a lot. But you always seem to come through in the clutch. Happy holidays. IB

THE DANCE

BY JOHN D. SPOONER

I've Got a Little List

Memorable movies, music, food, moments

As another year slips by, a few things stand out on my list of best discoveries of '06—pleasures I came across in the past 12 months that are worth sharing.

First, the cultural: If you love tales of espionage and intrigue, the London novels of John Lawton are delicious. It takes a while to figure out where he's going, but he's always a treat. Start anywhere in his Inspector Troy series: elegant, really smart and sexy, too.

Other happy cultural discoveries for me in 2006: the Chieftains' An Irish Evening, recorded live at the Grand Opera House in Belfast with Nanci Griffith and Roger Daltrey. I've also been listening to Diana Krall's Live in Paris this year, which contains my favorite song lyric (written decades ago by Joni Mitchell): "I could drink a case of you, darling, and still be on my feet." You're lucky if you've ever felt that way about someone.

You're in for a treat if you search out one of the great blues musicians in America, Ricky "King" Russell (www.rickyking russell.com). Long a feature at the old House of Blues, Ricky turns up at many places around town. You won't be sorry.

Great food and drink moments around Boston include: under-the-brick chicken at Via Matta; wines at Il Capriccio in Waltham; braised short ribs at Pigalle; breakfast on a couch at the Four Seasons; writing time with pappardelle maremmana at Toscano; the piano bar at the Langham; pasta Bolognese at Stella; and oysters Rockefeller at Locke-Ober. Also, one rant: Can we dispense with the "chef's complimentary tastings"? Those tiny samplings designed to tickle your palate invariably annoy, add to the calorie count and often include tastes you'd never order. Give me a jigger of the chef's favorite Scotch or a freebie glass of wine instead.

For you budding writers out there, your lives can be enhanced by exploring the workshops offered by Grub Street (www.grubstreet.org), a nonprofit offering classes in screenwriting, poetry, fiction and much more. (Arthur Golden, who wrote Memoirs of a Geisha, was the angel primarily responsible for getting Grub Street off the ground.) Stop talking about "writing someday" and sign up for some classes.

I attended two memorable charitable events this year. At the Literary Lights dinner for the Associates of the Boston Public Library, everyone was a book junkie, and the introductions of the honorees were a literary treat of the first order. And for th Joey O'Donnell film premiere to benef cystic fibrosis research, the O'Donnell fam ily assembled the people who help mak Boston home to some of the greatest cha acters in the country. If you love peopl seeing them work each other over for great cause is as good as a Final Four.

It's fun to be clueless sometimes—espe cially in this society of celebrity worshi and its tendency toward Emperor's Ne Clothes syndrome. It happened last wint for my wife and me during a week in Cab San Lucas, Mexico. We were sitting o lounges at the pool, directly behind a youn couple. The woman was on a cell phon speaking Spanish while absentminded fondling a tiny white dog. "Multitasking," said to my wife, staring at them from be hind my shades. I've always been some what suspicious of people with really sma dogs, as if they never really wanted a dog i the first place but consider them a fashio accessory, like a Judith Leiber bag.

"Got to be Hollywood," my wife replied

The woman was slim and beautiful. Th man was tall, sandy haired and, apart fro his companion, fairly unremarkable.

"I read People," my wife said, "and I don have a clue."

"Where's Harry when we need him?" said. (Harry's an old producer-friend fro L.A.) "I think she's a rich, spoiled Sout American kid whose daddy would punis her if he knew she was with an Anglo. Th guy, who knows? A new L.A. chef? N He's gotta be in a band. Plays the guitar."

"I'm not so sure," my wife said. "The g could be hot."

"I don't know," I said. "He has a litt pot, bathing suit riding low."

"Looks good to me," my wife replied.

The next day we found out they we Penelope Cruz and Matthew McConaughe 2005's "Sexiest Man Alive." Jeez; I have partner who's more handsome. Guess i better to see your stars on the screen than person. Except for Penelope.

Finally, if you grew up in Boston, The D parted is a must-see, even if it portrays a fa tasy Boston. Nicholson is unique in the h tory of cinema and alone makes a mo worth watching. But in this town, it does get any better than Mark Wahlberg.

Happy 2007. IB

VICTORIA ROWELL

BY JONATHAN SOROFF PHOTOGRAPH BY GREG HENRY/LAMOINE PHOTO GROUP

Best known for her role as Drucilla on The Young and the Restless and for starring opposite Dick Van Dyke on Diagnosis Murder, as well as appearing in such feature films as Dumb and Dumber, Victoria Rowell is a native of Portland, Maine, and spent her entire childhood in the foster care system. At age 8 she received a scholarship to study ballet at the Cambridge School of Ballet, and she spent her formative years here, until becoming a member of the American Ballet Theatre. Her transition to acting came when Bill Cosby cast her in Leonard Part 6, and her film and TV credits are numerous. Her next feature film, opening Jan. 5, is the Iraq war drama Home of the Brave, in which she plays Samuel L. Jackson's wife; the movie's already generating Oscar buzz, and the studio has offered Rowell for consideration as Best Supporting Actress. In April, she'll publish her book The Women Who Raised Me. The recipient of 11 NAACP Image Awards, she's involved with numerous charities, including the Rowell Foster Children's Positive Plan, and since 1998 she has been the national spokesperson for Casey Family Services (established by UPS founder Jim Casey). She's received the United Nations Association award and an honorary doctorate from Wheelock College. Rowell lives in L.A. with her two children.

Jonathan Soroff: First of all, I smell an Oscar in your future….
Victoria Rowell: [Laughs.] Yay!
JS: Any thoughts?
VR: Why not?
JS: Being a TV actor, and more specifically a soap opera actor, do you feel especially validated by the buzz surrounding this film?
VR: I subscribe to Dame Judi Dench's philosophy, which is that the whole body of work matters. She has a nighttime soap opera. We all know she does theater. She does film, but then she turns around and goes back to her soap opera. So that's me. I've been a wardrobe mistress in Boston. I've sold vintage clothing in Worcester. I've been a ballet dancer here and in New York. I've done daytime. I've done prime time. And I've done a lot of feature film. So for me it's about all of that culminating in perhaps one performance.
JS: So does this feel like your Cinderella moment?
VR: In a way, because so many things have come together that I've worked at for so long.
JS: Most important thing ballet taught you?
VR: Discipline.
JS: Bill Cosby gave you your big break in show biz. Do you eat a lot of Jell-O out of gratitude?
VR: Well, prior to Bill was Milos Forman, who used me in Hair. I'm in that movie; go rent it. I was still a ballet student and they needed pubescent, virginal debutantes. So Twyla Tharp auditioned us, and I got the gig. Next thing I knew I was sitting on Milos Forman's lap… in a very nice way.
JS: You had a ballet scholarship at the age of 8. Are you a Type A personality?
VR: Well, yes. I have very particular tastes. People say, "Oh my god! She's an obsessive compulsive," but I can't help myself. For instance, earlier today I was doing an interview and I was sitting in a chair with red cushions. Now, I'm a designer. I can't sit there and not notice that the tag was ripped off of the cushions, so I had to fix that situation. I'm that type of person. The picture has to be straight and all the chairs pushed in before I leave the room. [Laughs.]
JS: Are you like that at work?
VR: Absolutely.
JS: Do people in public respond to you as if you actually were Drucilla?
VR: Oh, it's beyond that. I'm their daughter. I'm their sister. I'm their next-door neighbor.
JS: Isn't that annoying?
VR: No, because it's always warm. I get these bosom hugs. People come up to me and hug me. It's not in a crazy way. It's more of a "Thanks for representing. This is what I'm going through." They feel an affinity for the character, because her essence and what she stands for is so much tribulation. Dru had nothing. She was illiterate. Then she learned to read and write. Now she's an executive, and married to one. It's a pull-yourself-up-by-the-bootstraps story, and a lot of people relate to it.
JS: What is up with the name Drucilla?
VR: Y'know, you could maybe answer that better than I could, because I auditioned as Gail but ended up with Drucilla. I said, "Wasn't that one of the ugly step-sisters in Cinderella? Where we goin' here, folks?"
JS: Do you watch The Price Is Right as a lead-in?
VR: [Laughs.] No, I don't. But I have caught Bob Barker, and you need to see him now, because he's retiring. This is not a good thing. But he's in his 80s, so I think he deserves a rest.
JS: Is Shemar Moore the prettiest man alive?
VR: He's one of them. The others are Jamie Foxx and, of course, Samuel L. Jackson.
JS: Who's a better kisser?
VR: Samuel L. Jackson.
JS: Biggest acting challenge of working on a soap?
VR: The people you're working with.
JS: Not the amount of dialogue? How many pages do you have to remember per episode?
VR: It depends on the story line, but it can be anywhere from 15 to 30 pages.
JS: Do you think soap actors get the respect they deserve?
VR: There's a group of us who are all in the same position: We love the daytime gig, but we're doing prime time, theater; we're writing scripts and books; we're doing costuming, designing houses, being Renaissance people. So I think you've got to go out and get respect. You can't expect it to come to you. Don't cry about being on daytime if you want to do something else. If it's all you want to do, good for you.
JS: Most idiotic line you've ever had to deliver?
VR: "Oh, honey, let's get into our Jell-O bath!" And there we were, licking Jell-O off each other. Only on daytime, baby.
JS: Would you ever do a nude scene?
VR: Oh, yeah. I have a fabulous body.
JS: Biggest beauty secret?
VR: Being honest, because honesty opens you up.
JS: One role you wanted but didn't get?
VR: Excellent question. They called me back three times for The Curious Case of Benjamin Button starring Brad Pitt and Cate Blanchett. I think they're filming now, and I don't know who they ended up casting. It's an F. Scott Fitzgerald story about—well, who cares? Move it along. You didn't get the part, Vicky!
JS: Is Hollywood racist or sexist?
VR: I'm gonna skirt this. Hollywood is receptive to innovative thinking. By that I mean I stayed on a series that thought they were going to hire a white actress until I walked into the room, and I ended up working with Dick Van Dyke for eight years. Although I should point out that as I was leaving the room, an actor said, "But she's black." Still, Viacom hired me. I've absolutely been able to get casting directors to flip the sex of a role. As an actor you have to be confident enough to suggest that.
JS: Hardest part of being a single mom?
VR: Well, I'm a single mom because I'm in L.A. with the two children, and Wynton Marsalis [the father of Rowell's second child] is traveling the world bringing people his music. I knew what I was getting into. He helps me raise my son and my daughter [from a prior marriage], but yeah, it's still very, very demanding. It requires a tremendous amount of strategy, and my kids have a life that's not a Hollywood life. I've had stewardesses say, "Your kids are so well-behaved." I just say, "Thank you," but it's not an accident. I work hard at it. I've never thrown my children to nannies.
JS: One man you'd like to do a love scene with?
VR: One? That's all I get?
JS: OK, three.
VR: Well, I'm eclectic. Morgan Freeman, Robert DeNiro. And Jamie Foxx.
JS: Last question: What do you want on your tombstone, or the headline of your obituary?
VR: Oh, man! It's way too early to start contemplating that. But I do know where I want to be buried: in Maine. I want to be buried where I was born. I want to find a piece of dirt up there. IB

"I GOT THE GIG, AND THE NEXT THING I KNEW I WAS SITTING ON MILOS FORMAN'S LAP... IN A VERY NICE WAY."

Suburban ADVENTURES!

A full day of fun is but a bridge—and/or tunnel—away.

One of the most beautiful stretches of coastline in New England can be found in Ipswich, on Crane Beach.

The suburbs—you know they're out there. At least in theory: Every so often you flip past some TV news correspondent reporting in from Sudbury, Tewksbury, Shrewsbury… wherever, about some sordid story or another. Your good friends, Tripp and What's-Her-Name, moved out there with their new kid, what, three years ago? Oh, and there's that $2,500 you invested in speech therapy to bury your pesky Billerica brogue once and for all.

You're a sophisticated city-dweller now, as metropolitan as they come. So who needs to slum it up in the suburbs? You do. Partly for the change of pace, partly for the quirky attractions that Greater Boston itself lacks, partly because you haven't truly escaped until you can return as an honest-to-goodness outsider.

So go ahead, pick a Saturday—and any of the five following day trips. Frankly, we think you'll be surprised by how much fun you can have out in the 'burbs when you know you can still spend the night in your South End studio, far from the madding Applebee's crowd. And as you motor back home into Boston proper, one glance at the Saturday-night amateurs queuing up outside the clubs around Tremont and Stuart should tell you that you haven't missed much. Think of it as a reverse commute for your social life.

IPSWICH

How to get there: Ipswich is accessible by car from Routes 1A and 133. It can be reached by train from North Station on the Commuter Rail's Newburyport Line.
Distance from Boston: 31.15 miles northeast
Male/female ratio: 47.3/52.7
Population (as of the 2000 census): 12,987
Fun fact: In the late '80s, the Crane Estate enjoyed Hollywood success as the set for films like Flowers in the Attic and The Witches of Eastwick, and the TV series Spenser: For Hire.
Fun lie: Citizens of this close-knit town get a half-day off on their birthday—as well as that of every other resident.

Go there for… the great outdoors!

Are you a truly committed outdoors enthusiast? While the cold-temp wimps shiver meekly by their radiators, are you outside embracing Nature in all its Glorious Bounty? Do your friends think you're a smidge clinically insane? So what? You'd also be nuts to waste Boston's proximity to so many places that offer prime scenery even come wintertime.

Case in point is the North Shore town of Ipswich. Crane Beach, one of the most picturesque stretches of shoreline in New England, is a great place to start. Enter at Castle Hill, the most coveted real estate in the area since at least the 1630s. After several generations of well-to-do gentleman farmers maintained the property—with its fertile soil and prime fishing—Chicago plumbing tycoon Richard T. Crane bought the land in the 1910s and rechristened it Crane Estate. Crane built not one but two sprawling summer homes here (his wife, Florence, couldn't bear the layout of the first one), and the second house, the 59-room Stuart-style mansion designed by David Adler, became an Ipswich landmark.

You'll have to wait till spring to tour the interior of The Great House (or just rent The Witches of Eastwick; see above), but strolling through manicured lawns, Italian gardens and softly rolling hills ain't a bad way to reach the sand. After all, the Cranes were among America's wealthiest families, and they didn't choose this particular plot because it was hard on the eyes. Starting at the shoreline, you've got more than 1,200 acres of natural habitat to wander around—with 3.5 miles of trails—keeping your eyes peeled for deer, foxes, turkeys, great horned owls, red-tailed hawks and all manner of seaside flora, including flesh-eating plants (well… insect-flesh-eating plants) called sundews. Sundews and foxes and deer? Oh, my.

If the free-range offerings at Crane Beach leave you jonesing for less-elusive wildlife sightings, get your fix at Wolf Hollow, the only wolf refuge in the Northeast. For $6, wolfmaster Joni Soffron gives a presentation on all you need to know (and then some) about the plight of grey wolves, their unfair portrayal in certain children's tales, their turn-ons, their turn-offs… or something like that. Frankly, we were so riveted watching Soffron nonchalantly shove Snausage upon Snausage into the mouths of the wolves skulking about her during the talk—without once losing eye contact with the audience—that details escape us.

No matter. You're here to see Weeble, Jelly, Osa, Luna, Nina, Denali and Geniek in action, and Soffron does a fine job of goading her "little hoodlums" into crowd-pleasing activity. When they're not eating "up to a third of their weight" in Snausages, the wolves follow her lead. She howls; they howl back. She mists the ground with a spray bottle full of watered-down perfume; they roll around and around in the spot, an instinctual response called "scent rolling."

Before you leave, check out the Wolf Hollow Gift Shop. There you'll find a generous inventory of wolf drawings, wolf photographs, wolf books, wolf pens, wolf mugs, wolf key chains and a host of other wolf-focused paraphernalia, and anything you purchase here is tax-deductible.

Where to eat: If you'd like to eat up to a third of your weight in food, you're in the right town. Besides the natural beauty, Ipswich is best known for its deep-fried clams. Not those generic chewy fried strips that come with every clam-shack fisherman's platter, but Ipswich whole-belly clams: The fat, tender midsections of these local bivalve mollusks are breaded, deep-fried and served with plenty of cool, tangy tartar sauce. If you can wait until mid-February, when it reopens after a two-month hiatus, the Clam Box is the best place to eat them (though almost every eatery in town offers a serviceable version of this local favorite). Built in 1938, the restaurant's exterior has that genuine look that makes postcard companies drool. Inside, the place resembles a nautical-themed Pizza Hut, but you'll be too busy working your way through the enormous servings of fried seafood (honestly, the portions are ludicrous) that you'll hardly notice. One nice touch: Every afternoon, the Clam Box stops service for 15–20 minutes to change the oil in the deep fryers.

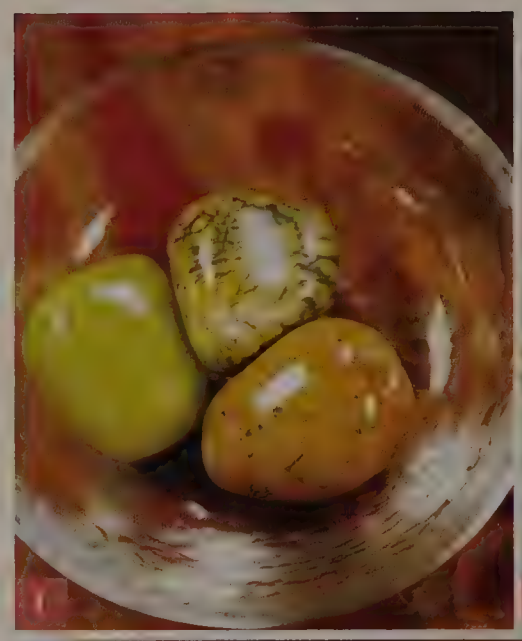
Ipswich isn't awash in upscale dining options, but one excellent choice is Ithaki, a Greek restaurant that serves Mediterranean cuisine with aplomb. Start with the grilled octopus salad, served with fava beans, greens and lemon aioli ($10), or a sampler of the kitchen's terrific "bread spreads" (tzatziki, taramosalata, hummus and curried carrot spread, served with toasted pita; $9). The entrées run $18–$25, with tempting options like moussaka (potato, eggplant and ground-meat casserole; $19) and a traditional Peloponnesian kapamas—chicken braised with tomatoes, onions and spices and served atop brown-butter-tossed fresh spaghetti ($21). But the fresh-seafood special, which changes daily, is always a good bet in this seaside town. The compact wine list offers several Greek vintages for less than $30 a bottle.

Where to drink: For a taste of local camaraderie—and a well-drawn beer on tap—stop by the Choate Bridge Pub, named after the 1764 bridge on which it sits. The green-paneled walls are decorated with vintage-looking signs ("No Beggars or Peddlars Allowed"), and an American flag hangs from the ceiling, along with the hood of a red Budweiser car, a flying pig and, in late November, a likeness of Santa Claus riding a motorcycle. The bar grub is just OK, so munch on popcorn from the Galaxy popper in the corner and drink your drinks. A note to the hollow of leg: The cocktails are served in pint glasses.

Across the street, the casual, 10-table Italian eatery Café Zabaglione has a full bar. After dining at Ithaki (see above), stop here for an after-dinner drink (or two) and one of the restaurant's house-made pastries.

Where to get feng shui crystals for Fluffy: You want quirky, you've got it. Feng shui guru Mary K. Stewart may be in high demand throughout New England as an interior design consultant for the New Age set, but you'll have to head up to Ipswich to check out her one-of-a-kind Feng Shui Boston Showroom & Art Gallery. Go on a Thursday evening, when Stewart serves wine and cheese until 9 pm.

Sure, there's a surplus of creepy-looking dolls and wall ornaments, but look carefully and you'll find plenty of odd odds-and-ends good for the person who has everything (else). Plus, every item is meant to help balance the various and sundry energies at work in your life—and in your rooms. Our favorites included the plastic doorknob signs that read "Shhh… I'm meditating!" and the feng shui crystals sized expressly for pets. Attach the crystals to your cat's collar, turn the litter box so it's facing away from the corner, and Fluffy's good to go. No, nobody puts kitty in the corner—unless, of course, the energy's this chill.



1. Feng shui crystals at Feng Shui Boston, perfectly sized for your pet; 2. Clam Box, the best place in town for Ipswich whole-belly clams; 3. a buttery lobstah roll from Clam Box; 4. a vertiginous view down the Crane Estate's formidable rolling hills; 5. the Great House at the Crane Estate; 6. Wolf Hollow's resident alpha male, Weeble, gets all stereotypical on us.

Enjoy your bourbon responsibly.

CONCORD

How to get there: Concord is accessible by car from Routes 2, 2A, 4, 62 and 225. It can be reached by train from North Station on the Commuter Rail's Fitchburg Line.
Distance from Boston: 24.01 miles northwest
Male/female ratio: 50.1/49.9
Population (as of the 2000 census): 16,933
Fun fact: The so-called solitude of Thoreau's Walden years was interrupted regularly by the sound of the passing train, just a quarter-mile from his cabin.
Fun lie: The town's name comes from the 17th-century spelling of the verb "to conquer," symbolizing man's triumph over nature.
Travel tip: To pass for a native, pronounce it "KONK-kid."

Go there for… the literary history!

If Disney were to create an Epcot-style theme park devoted to all things writerly, it might look something like Concord. It's got the requisite picturesque mini–Main Street, it's got the adorable shops, it's got the literary landmarks situated in improbable proximity to one another; you half-expect actors dolled up as Louisa May Alcott's diminutive women to come barreling down the street.

No becostumed characters here, but Alcott and her clan do come to life at the Orchard House, where her father, utopian philosopher Amos Bronson Alcott, moved his wife and daughters once he could no longer afford the upkeep of The Wayside, the larger property next door (which Nathaniel Hawthorne took off their hands and lived in till his death). Louisa penned, and set, her most famous novel here, and Little Women–ites will thrill to tour the fastidiously restored interior. See the "shelf" desk where Louisa ("Jo") wrote the book! See original paintings and sketches by May ("Amy"), an internationally known artist, done right on the walls! See the parlor where Anna ("Meg") got married! Even visitors only pretending they've read the book will marvel at the ingenuity of the "mood pillow," the rectangular cushion Louisa used to convey how social she felt on a given day. As she wrote in Little Women: "If 'the sausage,' as they called it, stood on end, it was a sign [to] approach… but if it lay flat across the sofa, woe to man, woman or child who dared disturb it!" (Note to Pottery Barn product developers: You should really get out to the suburbs.)

After Orchard House, you'll need to make choices—or make your trip a full weekend. You could tour the Emerson House, where writer-philosopher Ralph Waldo Emerson lived for more than half his life and convened the Transcendental Club. You could visit the Concord Museum, whose highlights include the contents of Emerson's study, the furnishings of Henry David Thoreau's Walden Pond cabin and the one surviving "one if by land, two if by sea" lantern, made famous by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's poem "Paul Revere's Ride." But our favorites were The Old Manse and Sleepy Hollow Cemetery. At the former, Emerson wrote his influential essay "Nature," before moving across town and renting out the place to Hawthorne and his new bride, Sophia. Whilst working on a collection of short stories titled Mosses From the Old Manse (the origin of the nickname) there, Hawthorne carved effusive graffiti—still on display—into the window panes using Sophia's diamond ring. Ever since his death in 1864, Hawthorne has slumbered in Sleepy Hollow, near the Alcotts, Emerson, Thoreau and sculptor Daniel Chester French. But it wasn't until this past June, when the remains of Sophia (and their daughter, Una) were dug up from a cemetery in London and transferred to an adjacent plot, that the couple were finally reunited.

Also worth a stop is the North Bridge, where the first shots of the Revolutionary War are said to have been fired. As much for the literary geek as the military buff, the spot was immortalized in Emerson's "Concord Hymn": "Here once the embattled farmers stood/ And fired the shot heard 'round the world."

Where to eat: Concord is a good place to visit after you've eaten—no wonder there were so many starving writers here! Kidding, kidding… well, mostly. No, Concord isn't known for its haute cuisine, but you can still get a good meal if you know where to look. Walden Grille, right in the historic center, serves decent fare during lunchtime; try the Walden chicken salad (grilled chicken, candied walnuts, and apples with apple-maple-thyme dressing; $10) or the pan-seared crabcake sandwich (on a bulkie roll with garlic-chili aioli; $8.75), served with terrific fries. In the evenings, the place gets fancier. Stick with the simpler dishes on the seafood-heavy menu—like the grilled salmon with jasmine rice, grilled eggplant and lemon-scallion oil ($18)—and you'll do fine.

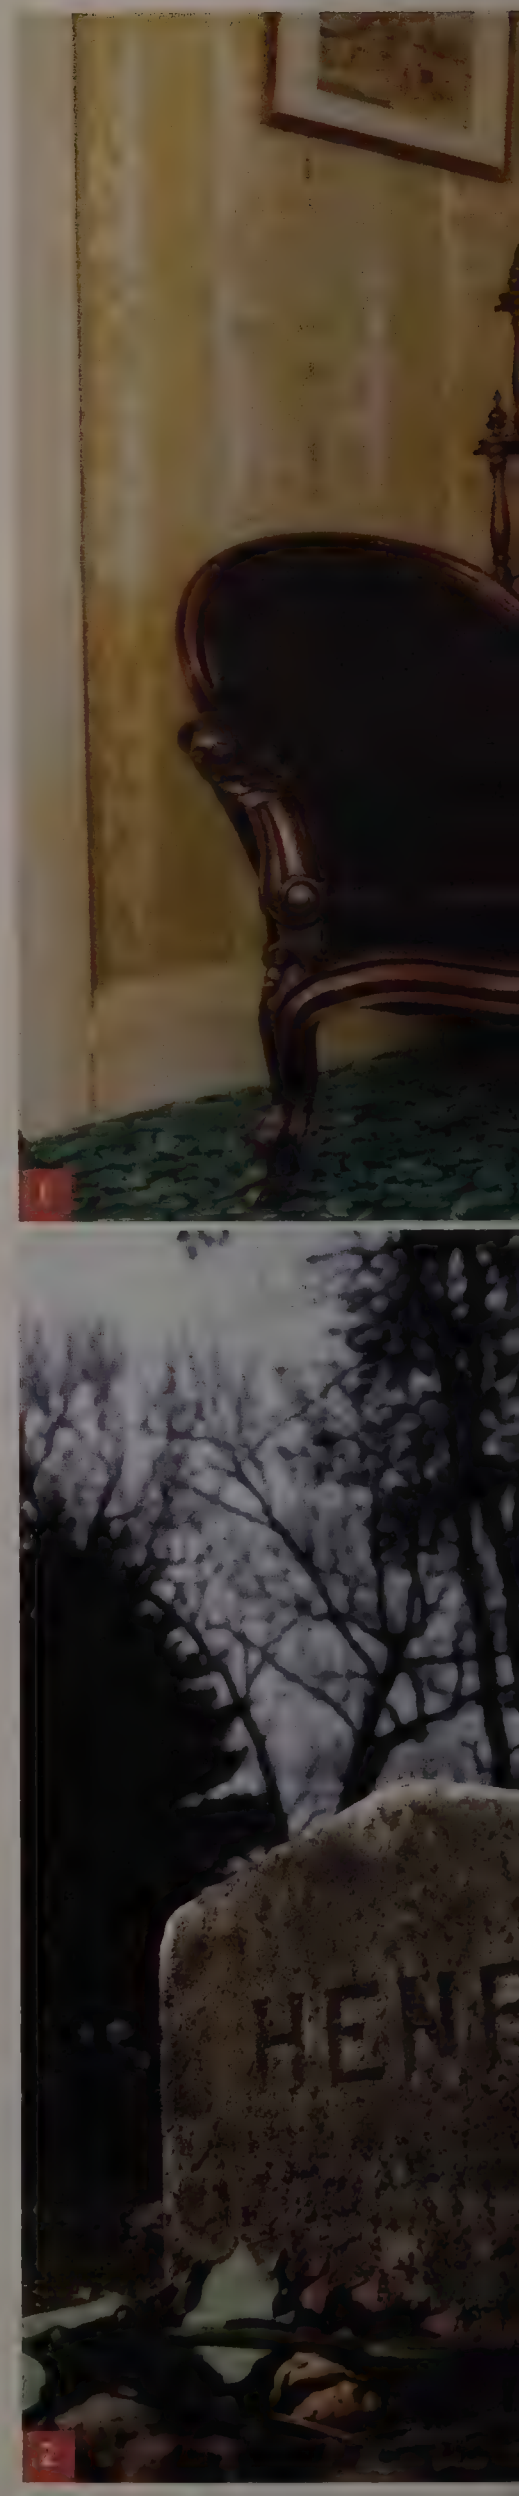
As befits a town so steeped in American tradition, the American-style Chinese vittles at Chang An won't scare away diners groomed on Route 1's Kowloon. But the cooks here know what they're doing, as they turn out flawless (if unambitious) dishes like chicken-and-pine-nut lettuce wraps ($8.95), beef with Chinese eggplant ($11.95) and Imperial Couple (shrimp and scallops in a spicy brown sauce; $14.95). What's more, the Mai Tais ($7) are cold and sweet and, unlike most of Boston's Chinatown spots, the ambience is relaxing and subdued.

If you happen to hit Concord during nice weather, the best food in town, hands down, can be had at The Cheese Shop, a European-style gourmet store that sells wines by the bottle, made-to-order sandwiches and, of course, lots of premium cheeses. "We're good because we don't try to cater to the lowest common denominator," says owner Peter Lovis, who keeps roughly 200 different cheeses in the shop at any time. Pick up a French picnic sandwich (roast turkey, Granny Smith apple, brie and champagne mustard on a baguette; $8.59/pound) or the local favorite, middle-aged spread ($7.99/pound)—a mixture of blue cheese, cheddar and cream cheese that's been selling well for 40-some years—and, weather permitting, head down to the Walden Pond State Reservation for a picnic in the shade. Here you can see where Thoreau enjoyed his self-imposed two-year exile from civilization, though all that remains at the site of his simple cabin is an even simpler pile of rocks marking its place.

Where to drink: While the 20- and 30-something bar crowd at the Walden Grille gets hopping as the evening gets later, guzzling down microbrews and a selection of well-chosen (if somewhat overpriced) wines by the glass, we preferred the scene around the block at the Colonial Inn. Built in 1716, the historic hotel houses a fine-dining restaurant, but what you want is the Village Forge Tavern (around the corner from a small bar area with tables). There's a full bar for cocktails, as well as a few beers on tap, including Guinness and the locally brewed Concord Pale Ale. Every night brings entertainment in the form of live music, a rotating roster of musicians performing everything from acoustic pop and jazz to folk music and traditional pub songs.

Where to get a Louisa May Alcott "Mood Pillow": Why, at the Orchard House Museum Shop, of course. The ultra-focused gift shop offers replicas of the famous mood "sausage" (see above; $24 or $34, depending on size), as well as a fanatically exhaustive inventory of everything you could possibly imagine might be emblazoned with the image of—or some obscure reference to—the Little Women author. And then some.

Other shops of note include the Concord Bookshop, which specializes in works by local authors past and present, and French Lessons, a chic clothing boutique whose great selection of lingerie has been touted in national women's magazines.



1. At the Orchard House, Louisa May Alcott's "mood pillow" in its most welcoming mode; 2. Henry David Thoreau's gravestone; 3. the Cheese Shop of Concord boasts an impressive stash of imported gourmet goods; 4. a wedge of Stiilton cheese from England; 5. an appropriately gloomy view of Sleepy Hollow Cemetery; 6. drinks by the fire at the Colonial Inn's Village Forge Tavern; 7. the Orchard House, the setting for Alcott's Little Women; 8. the façade of the Colonial Inn, decked out for the holidays.

How to get there: Lowell is accessible by car from I-495, U.S. Route 3, the Lowell Connector, and Routes 3A, 110, 113 and 133. It can be reached by train from North Station on the Commuter Rail's Lowell Line.
Distance from Boston: 30.52 miles northwest
Male/female ratio: 49.24/50.76
Population (as of the 2000 census): 105,167
Notable cultural reference: "Lowell, MA" is the fourth song on Death Cab for Cutie's 2000 album, We Have the Facts and We're Voting Yes.
Fun fact: Lowell was the first city to use telephone numbers.
Fun lie: Most Lowell businesses accept hugs as currency.

Go there for… the good art!

Arguably the birthplace of America's industrial revolution, Lowell was a thriving textile-manufacturing center throughout most of the 19th century. While much of that industry died out during the Great Depression, the vast brick buildings remained. Now, many of the original textile buildings hold museums, offices, condos and… hundreds of artist lofts.

At the turn of the 21st century, the city made a concerted effort to court artists, mainly by offering them studio prices that were (and still are) notably cheaper than spaces in more-hoity-toity Massachusetts cities. "The main enticement is the comparison to Cambridge prices," says Steve Syverson, proprietor of Van Gogh's Gear, a little art-supply store in Lowell Center. These days the Arts League of Lowell boasts some 286 members, and the city offers bunches of really good galleries and museums within walking distance of each other.

The Revolving Museum moved to the first floor of a gas and light building in Lowell in 2002, after proprietor Jerry Beck was evicted from his previous facility in Boston's Fort Point Channel. Boston's loss was Lowell's boon. Now Beck and company arrange several exhibitions and performances around the city throughout the year, and the main facility hosts free, themed exhibitions, which last from four to seven months. The museum culled the current exhibition, Race, Class ≠ Gender, from Baltimore's American Visionary Art Museum. It runs through Feb. 4. We especially enjoyed "The Recovery of Roy," Chris Roberts-Antieau's fabric-based homage to the flamboyant Vegas performer, post–tiger bite. It's reminiscent of Picasso's "Guernica," and it's a riot. We also liked "Where the Smiling Ends," Andi Olsen's haunting video presentation that captures tourists in the moments just after they stop posing for pictures in front of the Trevi Fountain in Rome. The museum's next exhibition, Electrifying! The Art of Light and Illumination, begins March 3.

Around the corner from the Revolving Museum you'll find the Whistler House Museum of Art (243 Worthen St.), the birthplace of James McNeill Whistler, the guy who painted that picture of his mother. The house contains three floors, 10 fireplaces, 14 rooms, and lots of 19th- and early-20th-century pieces by artists such as Frank W. Benson, Thomas B. Lawson, William Morris Hunt and William Paxton—and, of course, Whistler. The Parker Gallery, attached to the Whistler House, is a studio space featuring local artists.

Also worth checking out: Brush Art Gallery and Studios, located in the National Historical Park, hosts up to 15 artists, including painters, printmakers, ceramic artists, textile artists, photographers and quilters. Western Avenue Studios is home to more than 100 artists who open their doors to the public on the first Saturday of every month, from noon to 5 pm. More than a dozen artists have studios in The Ayer Lofts Condominiums and Art Gallery, which has hosted cooperative shows since it opened in October 2000. Last February, Ayer hosted On the Road, a mix of art dedicated to Beat writer Jack Kerouac, who was born in Lowell. (He's buried there, too. You can visit Kerouac's grave in the Edson Cemetery.)

Where to eat: Lowell is home to the second-largest Cambodian population in the U.S., so it stands to reason that the city is also home to some pretty good Cambodian food. We recommend the unpretentious Southeast Asian Restaurant, which features fare from Cambodia as well as from Thailand, Laos, Vietnam and Burma (Myanmar). Try the tod mun pla (spongy fish patties served with a sweet chili sauce; $5.95), the moak gai (sliced chicken sautéed with curry, coconut milk and veggies and served in a banana leaf; $10.95), and the yum nuer (grilled slivered beef cooked with lemongrass, cucumbers, onions, chili and lime; $9.95).

If you're in the mood for a quick healthy lunch with a silly moniker, stop by Life Alive Urban Oasis and Organic Café, a few steps from the Revolving Museum. Try the Goddess (smoked tofu with veggies and brown rice; $8.75) or the Child, (an organic PB&J in a whole grain tortilla; $5.25). This is also the place to pick up some male libido pills with maca root and yohimbe. Because Lowell is for lovers.

For a cuppa joe, head to the Brew'd Awakening Coffeehaus, a sunny community hangout that offers a good line of hot beverages, nine kinds of Belgian waffles and regularly scheduled story hours and poetry readings.

Where to drink: A university town and Massachusetts' fourth-largest city, Lowell's not hurting for bars. The oldest is also one of the best; Worthen House is a rustic tavern sporting wooden walls, tin ceilings, Wi-Fi and a neat antique belt-linked fan system. Kerouac drank here before he hit the road, and Edgar Allen Poe did, too. So can you! On tap, Worthen House offers PBR, Guinness, Demon's, Sam Adams seasonal and lager, and Wachusett Blueberry beer. Pints are all three bucks or less.

Across the Merrimack River you'll find Rusty G's Place, which features good mixed drinks, pub fare and live music Monday through Saturday, except for Fridays, which are DJ nights.

Where to get a ceramic bust of Michael Jackson: Found is a fun, crowded thrift store that feels like your grandparents' basement, if your grandparents happen to be really cool. On a recent visit we found an old Sunshine Biscuit sign, a sugar bowl and creamer shaped like a pair of friars, a David Cassidy lunchbox and several requisite creepy porcelain dolls.

DEDHAM

How to get there: Dedham is accessible by car from Routes 1 and 109, and I-95. It can be reached by train from South Station on the Commuter Rail's Franklin Line.
Distance from Boston: 21.35 miles southwest
Male/female ratio: 46.7/53.3
Population (as of the 2000 census): 23,464
Fun fact: When the town incorporated in 1636, residents rallied to stop the state from changing its name to Dedham from the original "Contentment."
Fun lie: The residents won.
Political intrigue: George W. Bush's great-great-great-great-great-grandfather called Dedham home.

Go there for… the bad art!

People, please: The "I'd rather be dead than in Dedham" bandwagon is so last year. If this suburb never made it to the top of your day-trip wish list, you've clearly never been to the Museum of Bad Art, located in the basement of the Dedham Community Theatre. Founded in 1993 by Scott Wilson after he happened upon several uninspired canvases in a roadside pile of garbage, MOBA is a tribute to the imperfection of the human artistic impulse. We're not talking mediocre. This art is truly bad, and you'll be hard-pressed to find such a stunningly consistent level of badness in one place again.

We had the good fortune to stumble in on the last throes of the exhibition Hackneyed Portraits, some of which were positively breathtaking—in the I-can't-breathe-'cause-I'm laughing-too-hard kind of way. We weren't in the room 20 seconds before "Queen of the Chocolate Chip" stopped us in our tracks. An earnest homage to the royal-portrait tradition, the eponymous subject, dressed to the nines in velvet and lace, looks out demurely from the frame with an expression that says, "Oops, you caught me noshing on a chocolate chip cookie again." Underscoring the work's captured-on-canvas immediacy, the queen wears a jaunty beret, her bejeweled crown relegated to a side table. Royalty, the painting implies, can kick back just like the rest of us. Even when posing for royal portraits.

Like great art, truly bad art speaks for itself. "Self-Portrait as Bird," for instance, reads as stilted self-expression even without explanation. But just in case, each canvas features a descriptive placard detailing the title and provenance (for instance: "Acquired from the trash in Roslindale"), as well as a curator's interpretation of the artist's intentions.

The MOBA gallery is open any time the community theater is open—which isn't a bad thing for day-trippers like us. The pretty theater, established in 1927, generally opens for matinee movies around noon. DCT has two screens, which offer first-run viewings of accessible independent films of the ilk you'd find at Kendall Square. "We bring Cambridge to you," says Paul McMurtry, the theater's owner.

The theater also hosts a regular stand-up comedy series. "Comedy—Live From the Square" features local acts who almost always play to a packed house. If all that bad art and good comedy drives you to drink, fear not. In addition to popcorn and candy, the theater serves beer and wine.

Where to eat: Thanks to Dedham's proximity to Boston, some local eateries cater to big-city palates. One of the best lies just a few doors down from MOBA. At Isabella, you'll find a mix of nervous couples on first dates and well-heeled yuppies tucking into inventive New American fare. While the ambience says "comfy neighborhood bistro," the showstopping food is as sophisticated as any destination restaurant—for a few dollars less. For instance, the delicious grilled lamb loin chops with herbed potato goat cheese gratin, eggplant caponata and roasted artichoke hearts in a red-wine demi-glace will run you $22—a bargain once you divide it by the sheer number of ingredients listed.

Not in the mood for posh? Dedham's got plenty of casual fare as well. The locals flock to Halfway Café (a small regional chain), which was hopping the Saturday night we stopped by. Seven TV screens play the ballgame and/or Keno, while patrons in their late 20s and 30s knock back draft beers at the cramped bar, scarfing down perfectly executed steamers (in beer-and-garlic broth; market price) and steak, pork or turkey tips ($11, turkey; $10, steak or pork). A "side" of homemade fries ($4) outlasted our beer-addled three-person team.

Where to drink: The Halfway Café is a great place for drinks, too, but there are a few other watering holes worth noting. Village Manor looks like a country hardware store from the outside, but inside it bustles with a crowd of sports fans enjoying beer (10 on tap) and the flat-screen TVs above the bar. We were wary when a friendly bartender recommended an appetizer called "Buffalo Chicken Dip" ($6.95) but glad we dared. Made with chunks of chicken, blue cheese, cheddar cheese and hot sauce and served with tortilla chips, it gamely complemented a cold Sam Adams.

For a serving of rock 'n' roll with your Rolling Rock ($3.75), Deli After Dark (across the street from MOBA) is the place to be Friday and Saturday nights, when the live music starts up between 8 and 9 pm. The bar offers about a dozen bottled beers and numerous wines by the glass—17 of them—all of which run between $4.95 and $6.95.

If you prefer to make your own music, head to Kiku Yama, just around the corner. Upstairs, the place looks like yet another gimmicky Japanese steakhouse, with a knife-juggling demo at every family-crammed table. But as it gets later, a hip-looking young clientele begins filling the basement level for karaoke that lasts till closing time at 1 am.

Where to smoke 'em if you bought 'em: We sauntered into several shops in Dedham Center and asked the lame but open-ended question: "What makes this place special?" The staff at The Court House Cigar Company offered the best answer. "You can smoke here," says Darby Nelligan, a cashier at the best little smoke shop in Dedham. "It's one of the few places left where you can still smoke inside." Court House offers a first-rate line of smokes and smoking accessories, including cigar brands such as Ashton, Cohiba and Davidoff. "These are premium cigars, as opposed to the ones you'd get in a gas station," Nelligan says. Court House offers a 15 percent discount to firemen, policemen and paramedics. Which is kind of funny, if you think about it.

If you're shopping for the kids, Court House may not be your best bet. Instead, check out The Blue Bunny, "a little shop with a big mission" that sells art supplies, toys and a terrific selection of children's books. Local author and illustrator Peter H. Reynolds co-owns the Blue Bunny, and the store offers autographed copies of his books.

1 The Museum of Bad Art's "Queen of the Chocolate Chip" plumbs the very nadir of royal portraiture; 2 MOBA's "Self-Portrait as a Bird" can be viewed as a cautionary tale on self-expression taken too far; 3 the lamb loin chops at Isabella are on par with the fare served in Boston's best restaurants; 4 the Courthouse Cigar Company sells world-class smokes and smoking accessories, and you puff away right in the shop; 5 try the buffalo dip at the Village Manor, a local hangout.

Exclusive Sales and Marketing Agents OTIS & AHEARN

1. Guzzle down a Bel-Air, a Galaxy or just a regular coffee at the Atomic Café, where an early-20s crowd holds forth daily; 2. Jerry's Comics and Collectibles provides everything you need in the way of rare comic strips and quirky products inspired by them; 3. Soma is the lounge of choice for Beverly's swankiest clientele, and the trendy cocktails they drink, like this Cucumber Cosmo; 4. Independence Park Beach at dusk.

How to get there: Beverly is accessible by car from Route 128 or Route 1A. It can be reached by train from North Station on the Commuter Rail's Newburyport/Rockport Line.
Distance from Boston: 22 miles northeast
Male/female ratio: 47.3/52.7
Population (as of the 2000 census): 39,862
Stargazing: Author John Updike lives in Beverly's seaside Beverly Farms neighborhood.
Fun fact: Beverly was home to both the first cotton mill and the first Sunday school in the U.S.
Fun lie: Eighty-two percent of female residents in Beverly are actually named Beverly—as are 22 percent of males.

Go there for… the magic!

Tourists often dis the pretty seaside city of Beverly for Salem, its more famous neighbor to the south. And yeah, if you're looking for Wiccan boutiques and kitschy witchy attractions, then Salem's your town. But if you like your magic more wholesome than black, then come on up to Beverly.

Since 1977 the Cabot St. Cinema Theatre has been hosting Le Grand David and his own Spectacular Magic Company, the longest-running resident stage-magic show on earth. The show, as unapologetically glitzy as its name, is the brainchild of 74-year-old Cuba-native Cesareo Pelaez, who performs under the name "Marco the Magi." Every Sunday at 3 pm from September through July, headliner David Bull, Marco and a cast of tens deliver an elaborate two-hour performance that includes sleight of hand, metamorphoses, levitation, apparent human vivisection, clowns, pretty ladies in elaborate costumes, and several good-natured animals that don't seem to mind disappearing and reappearing.

Pelaez was obviously influenced by the magician David Bamberg (aka Fu Manchu), who performed a Chinese-themed show throughout Latin America in the 1930s and '40s. To that end, the Cabot Street show includes an enjoyable if perplexing mix of Chinese tapestries and Latin music. With its velvet-happy elegant lobby and balcony, the Cabot, opened in 1920, is the perfect setting for a magic act that's old-fashioned but far from tired. If you treat yourself to popcorn or candy at the concession stand, don't be alarmed by the clown who takes your order in a voice that sounds as if he's swallowed a whistle.

Le Grand David and company also perform on Thursday evenings around the corner at the Larcom Theatre, eight years older than the Cabot, which showed porn for a stint in the 1970s and '80s until it was restored back into a playhouse in 1984.

Beverly is also home to the North Shore Music Theatre ("NSMT" to local hipsters), which hosts several musicals each year, in addition to the occasional celebrity concert; Vince Gill is playing there in March.

Want to try your hand at being a magician? Conjure up some ghosts at one of Beverly's renowned historic houses, all once inhabited by famous guys named John. The John Hale House, dating back to 1694, was built by the Rev. Hale, best-known for his persecution of women during the Salem Witch Trials, until his wife was accused and he had a change of heart. His house, now a museum, includes witch hunt–related artifacts. The John Balch House, built in the 1630s, is one of the oldest wood-frame houses in the U.S. And The John Cabot House, 1781, was home to one of the nation's first shipping magnates.

Where to eat: Beverly offers plenty of good restaurants, mostly located up and down Cabot Street, the little city's main drag. For coffee and a quick bite, try the newly opened What's Brewin' Café, which offers the usual list of hot beverages; it sells yummy muffins and wins points for letting you buy them by the half. Down the street, the bustling Atomic Café serves coffee, sandwiches, salads, cupcakes and smoothies with names like the Bel-Air and the Galaxy.

Brenden Crocker's Wild Horse Café, a favorite among locals, serves a terrific wood-grilled filet mignon ($29) and curried rice and vegetables ($17). The Wild Horse features a classy, comfortable, popular bar—and a bar menu to match. Try the wood-grilled burger ($8.25) or the pineapple-and-rum-soaked ribs ($9.50 for a half rack). Mandrake Bar Bistro, a favorite of Beverly singles and out-of-towners alike, serves French-inspired American fare. Try the duck confit with creamy polenta and cipollini onion compote ($9). Chianti Café offers good Italian fare and a chance to see minor celebrities, who've been known to dine there after a performance at the Cabot Theatre across the street. "Recently we've served Peter Frampton, Trisha Yearwood, the Beach Boys, Bill Cosby, Kenny Rogers, and Peter, Paul and Mary," says owner Richard Marino. "Trisha was nice enough to mention from the stage how much she enjoyed dining here."

Meanwhile, G2 Bar & Grill offers good steaks and a nice wine list in the city's upscale Beverly Farms neighborhood. "You feel like you're rubbing elbows with Beverly's elite," says city resident Amy Peterson.

Where to drink: While the food receives mixed reviews, locals agree that the drink menu at the swanky Soma is one of the best and most eclectic in town. Peterson raves about the Cucumber Cosmo and the Fresh Watermelon (both $9). If you want less of a lounge and more of a tavern, try the Fish Hill Tavern, which features live music Wednesday through Friday. On Tuesdays, wash down your beer with 25-cent wings. The Pickled Onion, an Irish bar popular with the 20-something crowd, features traditional Irish music on Friday nights and a half-time buffet on Sunday during football season.

Where to get a Rat Fink bobblehead air freshener: We were bored with the shops on Cabot Street until we found Jerry's Comics and Collectibles, a wonderful hole-in-the-wall packed with vintage comic books (like Gold Key's Tarzan and Marvel's The Silver Surfer) and the kind of gift you'd buy for a weird nephew or a girlfriend with a good sense of humor. Need an Incredible Hulk pinball game, a Black Widow resin bust or an Underdog tumbler? Come to Jerry's. Anything you buy at the store will be singular—well, at least singular to the store. "Generally, I don't have two of anything," says Jerry Kadlick, who opened the store eight years ago. "My store is too small." IB

A new year, A NEW YOU

MAKE IT STICK THIS TIME, BROTHERS AND SISTERS.

BY SAM WALTERS ILLUSTRATIONS BY ALLI ARNOLD

he new year is almost upon us, and with it comes the somber prospect of laying out the same set of failed resolutions as last year—and all the preceding years, probably even extending through your past lives. (I've done regressive hypnosis that revealed I was once a slacking Egyptian pharaoh called Shamtutnaten, or "He Who Naps Soundly While Hittites Overrun His Kingdom.") For insight into how to make some common resolutions stick, I approached top experts in the field of self-improvement. Unfortunately, every one of these jackals wanted money for their ideas and wouldn't let me run a tab, so instead I got lit and brainstormed some of my own ideas for sticking to those goals you set every Jan. 1 and abandon by Jan. 16. I'm sure they're just as good. Try them on and by next New Year's no one will even recognize you! (Hopefully not because you've become homeless.)

ly girlfriend and I are currently in the slowest race ever to lose 10 pounds. We love ach other so much, we keep trying to give the other a head start by gaining weight. 've optioned a screenplay about this: Morbidly Obese for You.) If you're serious about eight loss though, you'd best start eating, too, because—let's be frank—the only effecve method is getting your stomach stapled, and you need to be gargantuan to qualify r the procedure. Of course, you could opt for the gastrointestinal balloon, which is inted in the stomach to simulate being full. The problem with this device is that most eople eat past the point of fullness, stretching the stomach and requiring ever larger alloons to fill up the space. The inevitable result is that you'll have to park a blimp in our gut. For those who refuse to be splayed open or blown up, there's at least a way for ou to feel good about yourselves. First, buy a scale with a digital display and weigh in. et's say it reads 150 pounds. Now, go and do a single sit-up, then weigh yourself again—ut first turn the scale 180 degrees. The display will read 051 pounds! You've lost 99 ounds in 10 seconds! Good for you! Of course, 51 pounds is dangerously underweight, you must start eating immediately to get yourself up to a healthy weight as fast as posble. Don't slack off; it's a medical emergency!

Be More Assertive

ou've sat on your trembling hands long enough! By gum, it's time you took the bull by e horns and, er, strapped on his cojones! Generally people want to be more assertive in one or both of two circumstances: standing up to people and approaching strangers at a party/bar/alley-behind-the-bar. To act assertively toward your superior, it helps to imagine him or her in something inferior, like a little boy's sailor suit, or bondage gear. (Don't mix these images, since it's a felony in most states.) Also, if you're picturing your boss trussed up like the Gimp, refrain from acting on the fantasy, however tempting; if you spank your boss, he or she may like it, and that'll only add to your work load. Visualization can also be used in the social setting, by imagining that the person you wish to speak to is in the buff. The added enticement may be just what's needed to firm up your courage. If, after mentally removing the stranger's clothes, you find the person less appealing, have another drink and look again. Repeat until attractiveness is achieved, and a haunting life decision is set in motion.

Save Money

While I'm sure your band/screenplay/idea for a time machine will soon propel you to riches, at the moment you're so broke you're crunching on dry Ramen noodles because your water's been shut off. It's time to start living within your means before you simply stop living. If you're in a band, the first step is to stop shooting heroin. We know you're doing it, and it's time to cut it out. For the rest of you, budgeting and eliminating unnecessary expenses is the only way. You can do it! Even I, who, in my own words, "can't math" and am so broke I've been contemplating playing air guitar in the subway for spare change, am getting the hang of it. You can always do with less. I'm down to one shoe and a belly shirt. The latter used to have a bottom, but I cut it off and sold it for a quarter to a bum who needed a scarf. I've saved money—it probably costs an extra nickel to launder two halves of a shirt—and made a cool 25 cents to put toward my debt! Cut enough clothes in half and you can quickly become a hundredaire. At the rate I'm going, I'll have my credit cards paid off in a mere five years—posthumously, but who needs a suit to be buried in. (I came into the world wearing my complimentary birthday one and see no reason to go out differently.)

Be Nicer to People

You're an important person, responsible for all manner of importantness, so, yes, sometimes you snap at people because of the incredible pressure you're under. (I completely understand; coming up with prose like this requires me to drink beer with excruciating concentration.) Of course, you wouldn't bark at people if they weren't all nimrods, but despite your incredible powers, you haven't the capacity to make people smarter. You could, perhaps, stand to be even more patient than you already are, if such magnanimity is even possible; it's doubtful Jesus could meet your standard. But how do you learn to tolerate such incompetence? One technique is to imagine yourself living these people's lives. Picture getting up in the morning, staring at your shoes, trying hard to determine which one goes on which foot, before heading out with the left shoe on the right foot and right one on the left, one shoe even on backwards. Also, you forgot to wear pants and have to go back home after your friendly neighborhood policeman—accustomed to helping you—informs you in gentle tones that this is generally prohibited. What an existence! Contemplating this, your heart will surely melt some and you'll feel compelled to be kinder toward these cursed souls and maybe even give them a lollipop. My girlfriend has also suggested the alternative technique that I just stop being such an asshole.

The Quits

As the Holy Trinity of New Year's resolutions, giving up tobacco, booze and caffeine demand their own unique strategies.

Quit Smoking: Smoking is an addictive triple-whammy. People get hooked on the nicotine first and foremost, but the oral habit of smoking and even the taste of tobacco are powerful draws for some. Therefore, to have any chance of quitting, smokers must meet at least two of these needs alternatively. Forget about tackling the nicotine addiction, as the only "substitutes" are Nicorette and the patch, whose active ingredient is—cough—nicotine. (Wonder who the parent companies for these snake oils are?) However, there is a simple and immediate solution at hand to address the issues of habit and taste. Smoke all you like—just flip that cigarette around and light the filter! It will taste like fiberglass, but you get to filter the filter through savory tobacco! For those who insist on smoking cigarettes from the right end, this method can still help them stop, so long as the filter remains lit, and in their mouth.

Quit Drinking: If you need to stop completely, take heart. Presumably your life is in shambles and you have good motivation to quit. However, if you're just a lush looking to cut back, you are unfortunately screwed. There's simply no condition that drinking produces ("Damn, I look bad") that drinking more doesn't cure ("Damn, I look GREAT!"). You can try one of the following experimental treatments, but I can't endorse them:

- For every drink you buy yourself, buy another two each for two people. Increase the number of drinks with the size of the group—three each for three people, four each for four people, etc. Pros: You'll only be able to afford getting mildly buzzed. Cons: Everyone else will be having a much better time than you, making treatment adherence difficult.
- Drink nonalcoholic beer. Pros: If you bring genuine, alcoholic beer labels you can slap them on the near-beer bottles and your friends won't make fun of you. Cons: "Nonalcoholic" beer actually contains 0.5 percent alcohol, so you may find yourself drinking them by the case.

Quit Caffeine: Most people mistakenly believe giving up caffeine will be a sma bother. In fact, more than with any other addictive master, you are caffeine's bitch. you quit smoking and feel irritable, you can kill someone deserving. If you quit drinkin and can't cope, you can pick up a drug habit. But if you drink less coffee, you'll end u with a caffeine headache that feels like someone's cleaving your skull with a hatche The only remedy that has a chance of working is to get guillotined, as it deprives you a head to suffer aches. There is, however, some speculation that a freshly severed hea continues to experience caffeine withdrawal, as evidenced by eyewitness accounts pained squinting and mouth movements that lip-reading experts have deciphered a "For god's sake, gimme a cup of coffee...."

Get Motivated

You want to break out and be all you can be, but you're in a codependent relationshi with your couch. This is probably because you have Negative Beliefs about yourself. T reverse these delusions—surely they're just delusions—you could pay big bucks to hea some natural-born crackhead like Anthony Robbins tell you how swell you are (dee down inside, where coincidentally only a trained eye can see it), or you could just dra your own motivational speech and recite it t yourself 52,000 times a day. Try mine: "I can d anything I set my mind to, and I'm setting m mind to doing anything at all! There's a tige that's in a cage, that's in my heart, in the righ ventricle—I think—and I'm letting him out an putting him in my pants! I'm not wearing my ugl mask anymore; I'm showing my handsome face and it's at least as good-looking as Benicio De Toro's, who's got huge bags under his eyes, an he's a millionaire! I'm gonna get a facelift and b a billionaire! No fear! Seize the day! Have seizure! I'm gonna kick some ass and take som names, and then the police probably will too Woo-woo! The roof! The roof! The roof is o fire!" Usually I get so excited by this I start break dancing. Then I go back to bed, feeling awesom about myself.

Take It Easy

For some dynamic people, allowing themsel permission and time to relax takes tremendous fort. (You see the conflict here.) Even if they ove come these hurdles, often their perfectionist n ture compels them to get the act of letting go "ju right." My girlfriend is one of these types; I re cently came home to find her working hard at res ing, sprawled out on a chaise longue she'd haule home from an antiques store and refinished th morning, sipping organic lemonade she'd squeeze by hand, and listening to a compilation of wha songs she'd burned after personally recording th beasts on a whale watch that afternoon. Thoug she hates the color, she'd also painted the entir apartment blue because it's the one touted by ex perts as soothing. She was, of course, suffering fro nervous exhaustion and had to work for seve straight days afterward to unwind. Thankfull sloth-aversion therapies, wherein the patient becomes slowly inured to the lifestyle o lazy fat ass—first by eating one potato chip, then two potato chips, then three pota chips, etc., always while lying in a hammock—have proven very effective. For the ex treme overachiever who's failed at counseling, medication is in order. These people ca be helped if they can be steered towards Quaaludes.

Grow Spiritually

It's impossible to evolve the soul while the mind remains tuned to consumerism. Mon is the chain that binds one to the materialistic plane, but there is a way out of this pu gatory: giving me all your dough. I've attained enlightenment through the completi of this article, and after meditating on it this morning I'm taking the name Bhagw Flimflam Shamalamadingdong. I accept no fees, of course, but I'm willing to bear t earthly burden of your finances, which will be put toward the spiritual purchase of lu ury cars and beach homes for me to better meditate in; I'll pass on my daily revelatio and you can polish my bumpers. Together we can see that from hereon you meet yo New Year's resolution, and I mine: to make some cash by any means necessary. I ju chipped a tooth on one of those damned noodles. IB

Great Bay Clam Chowder ($11)

500 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-532-5300); www.gbayrestaurant.com

Have you ever had your chowder assembled tableside—with the broth poured from a cast iron Asian teapot? Oddly enough, Great Bay chef Lee Chizmar says this dismantling of a classic clam chowder presentation "evolved from necessity first." Anyone who's dined in Comm. Ave.'s great seafood hall has seen members of the waitstaff mimic Stairmaster workouts as they run up and down the long flight from the dining room to the kitchen. Not wanting his soup to suffer from the travel time, Chizmar brilliantly elected to hold the chowder's liquid portion in the mini vessel. "And from that functionality," he says, "you get a nice hot bowl of soup and a unique presentation as well."

What awaits in the bowl, meanwhile, is a neat mound of fresh chopped clams—up to five different varieties, including tiny cockles imported from New Zealand, countnecks, Duxbury razor clams and Wellfleet littlenecks—diced onion, potato, celery, leeks and crisp bacon bits. At the table, our sharply dressed waiter decants the perfectly fluid butter-yellow broth—a delicate balance of celery, onion, celery root, potato, leek, garlic, bacon and the clam medley's cooking liquid—that softens the crisp vegetables to a pleasant al dente and just barely glazes my spoon. It's the last interpretation you'd think of for this traditionally humble potage, but it's more than great.

Our search for the best reveals the versatility of a New England staple.

Chowder Quest

After the Red Sox and the Big Dig, Boston's biggest claim to fame has to be New England–style clam chowder. Most often a creamy, hearty concoction—a distant relative of the thin, tomato-based soup indigenous to Manhattan (and watch your back if you confuse the two)—this combination of fresh clams, potatoes, onions, smoky pork and dairy-laced broth shows up on dozens of local menus and makes frequent appearances at high-profile events and landmarks: the presidential inauguration, John Kerry's Election Day lunch menu, Fenway Park, Gillette Stadium, and just about every roadside shack, greasy spoon and waterfront shanty from Woods Hole to Provincetown.

In short, chowder is everywhere, but who, we wondered, has got the very best? A few dozen spoonfuls into my (roughly) 15,000-calorie quest for a definitive answer to that question—not surprisingly, numerous restaurants list theirs as "Award Winning" or "Best in Boston"—it becomes apparent that settling on just one is like choosing between littlenecks and langoustines. These days, there are so many variations on the old-school crock of cream, potatoes and quahogs that a vertical comparison is futile at best. So, instead, we've singled out the stylish few: standout soups, each with a distinctive personality to be savored.

OCEANA RESTAURANT
Marriott at Long Wharf, 96 State St., Boston (617-227-3838); www.oceanaatlongwharf.com

You can't get much closer to a seafood source than Boston's Long Wharf, and the dark and handsome seafood restaurant tucked into the Marriott means to capitalize on its location. Whether you're sitting at the polished bar watching the game or looking out over the harbor from your waterview table, a bowl of Oceana's archetypal chowder hits the spot. "We sell gallons and gallons of it, during the winter months especially," says kitchen operations supervisor Jessica Yong. Simplicity is the key to this corporate Marriott recipe; a simple roux, celery, cream, thyme, mammoth potato chunks and a generous helping of rough-chopped North Atlantic sea clams afford this comfort-food staple the rustic feel and remarkable savor that give locals and hotel guests alike a taste of what Boston calls home.

Clam Chowder ($9.50)

NEPTUNE OYSTER
3 Salem St., Boston (617-742-3474); www.neptuneoyster.com

Strange to think you can stumble upon a terrific bowl of chowder in Boston's pasta and cannoli capital, but this bright, sleek North End seafood sanctuary serves up a scrumptious sample of New England's finest. True, it's thin, but did you know that the original recipe for New England clam chowder came sans cream? Indeed, this brothy rendition is probably one of the most loyal forms of chowder around. "I have a strict philosophy when it comes to chowder: freshness," says chef Dave Nevins, who brews to order each batch of fresh-shucked top necks—and take our word for it, this chowder is chock full of them—salt pork, celery, onions, chunked potatoes and house-made clam stock. "It's thickened with béchamel and then finished with a touch of cream—a tablespoon or so—and, at the last second, some fresh clam juice reserved from the shucked top necks for extra brininess." Another little-known fact: Nevins offers a by-request "clear broth" (i.e., dairy-free) version that's all about the clams—similar to what Rhode Islanders would consider the real deal. And Nevins agrees: "When we say, 'clam chowder,' we mean, 'clam chowder.'"

KINGFISH HALL
38 Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Boston (617-523-8862); http://toddenglish.com/Restaurants/Kingfish.html

Todd English may have jump-started high-end cuisine in close to a dozen cities (and on one really big boat) worldwide, but his food finds its roots just north of the Charles River. Granted, Olives doesn't offer clam chowder, but at Kingfish Hall over in Boston's biggest tourist mecca, diners can dip into the celebrity chef's robust and complex cream-laced dual-clam broth with a chic hammered-metal spoon. "Our chowder gets back to the idea of not wanting to overpower the base ingredients with flour and roux," explains executive chef Katherine DeWitt See. The liquid's clean, pure flavors derive from nothing other than leeks (instead of onions), celery, fresh clam juice, heavy cream and smoked bacon. Fresh, minced Wellfleet clams, Idaho potatoes and in-shell littlenecks boost the already concentrated flavors, and per instructions from English himself, a trio of those bulky, old-school oyster crackers float on top.

LEGAL SEA FOODS
33 locations from Massachusetts to Florida (800-343-5804); www.legalseafoods.com

Legal Sea Foods ladles out what's probably the most famous bowl of chowder on the globe. Since 1981, Legal's recipe has been served as a first course at Capitol Hill dinners and presidential inaugurations; consumed from small cardboard cups by shivering Red Sox and Patriots fans at their respective stadiums; and delivered to chowder-craving customers' doorsteps through mail-order shipping. The best part? No matter where you are, you can be sure every bowl will be equally tasty. For maximum consistency, Legal whips up 3,500 gallons of the stuff per week in a Boston-area commercial kitchen and sends the containers packing to Burlington and Boca Raton—and about 30 other locations in between. Aside from admitting to its obviously addictive combination of pork fatback, onion, clam and cream, however, the folks at Legal's are keeping their secrets. "Only three people have access to the recipe," says executive chef Richard Vellante. "I can't tell you all the ingredients, or else I'd have to kill you." Fair enough.

If Anthony's didn't already make the best version of old-school chowder in the city, it would still deserve props as the best chowder-downing venue around. Three sheets of glass help enclose the übertraditional, nautical-themed dining room, complete with wall-mounted weathered ship signs reading "Falmouth" and "Cumberland," and leather-covered mahogany chairs from which you can watch airplanes glide over the Harbor. But the Old World atmosphere isn't the only draw: As it turns out, their simple china bowl of thick, white chowder brimming with both littlenecks and quahogs—"for extra flavor," according to co-owner Michael Athanas—is the best around. "My father opened his first restaurant in Lynn in 1937," says Athanas, who runs the flagship South Boston location. "This recipe was part of the original menu, and it hasn't changed much since then." And while Athanas insists that "chowders are different—not better than one another," he also concedes that "we think [ours] is the best; otherwise we'd change it." Tip: It's even better enjoyed with one of their famous popovers.

Correction: New England is actually famous for two types of chowder, though the folks at the New England Soup Factory discovered a long time ago that the variety that substitutes sweet corn kernels and fresh herbs for quahogs actually pairs brilliantly with the briny seafood version. The clam and corn chowder "is one of our house specialties, and we've been serving it for over 11 years," says executive chef/owner Marjorie Druker. From-scratch seafood-and-clam stock serves as a base for a classic chowder combination of onions, potatoes, celery and cream, but the fusion of clams and corn makes this chowder, as Druker notes, "intensely flavored" and "different and wonderful tasting"—even when spooned from a take-out cup. IN & OUT LIST 2007

Closing the curtain on another year just wouldn't feel right without paying final tribute to the people, places and things that inexplicably dominated our world for the past 12 months. As we kick the stale pop-culture trash of 2006 to the curb, we, the IMPROPER editors, herald what will obsess us in 2007—and likely bore us by '08. As the old saying goes, out with the old...

UMA THURMAN MAY LOOK GORGEOUS, BUT ASK HER A FEW QUESTIONS AND— NO, SHE'S BASICALLY PERFECT

BY JONATHAN SOROFF
PHOTOGRAPH BY KERRY BRETT HURLEY

From her first memorable appearance as Venus on the half-shell in Terry Gilliam's Adventures of Baron Munchausen to her star turns in such megahits as Pulp Fiction and Kill Bill, the divine Ms. Thurman has thoroughly captured our hearts, and we're proud to call her one of our own. By now, her life story has become the stuff of legend: Born in Boston and raised primarily in Western Mass., she's the daughter of an eminent professor of Asian studies and a Swedish psychiatrist/fashion model who was previously married to LSD guru Timothy Leary (Uma's godfather) after the two were introduced by Salvador Dalí. The family also numbered the Dalai Lama among its nearest and dearest, and Uma and her siblings were raised in a Buddhist household. After attending prep school at Northfield Mount Herman in Gill, she began modeling at the age of 16, and her subsequent film career has catapulted her into the front ranks of female stars in Hollywood, able to command the kind of per-picture salary earned by the likes of Julia and Nicole, while her fascinatingly Nordic features still grace the pages of magazines as the exclusive face of French fashion conglomerate LVMH. Despite two marriages that didn't stick (to actors Gary Oldman and Ethan Hawke), she seems not to have lost her faith in love, being currently linked to hotelier Andres Balazs, and she's a devoted, hands-on mother to her two children. In fact, it was motherhood that persuaded her to become involved with Room to Grow, the nonprofit founded by the wife of documentary filmmaker Ken Burns, which provides low-income mothers with training and material goods to help them raise their children. It was on a recent visit to Boston for a Room to Grow fundraiser that we caught up with her.

Jonathan Soroff: I'm sure every charity tries to get you involved. How do you choose the ones that you support?

Uma Thurman: Room to Grow is one I've been involved with since it was created. I chose it because when it was started I had my first child, so I was feeling very much connected to what it's like to go through the stress and the anxiety of how to prepare and care for a child. The mission of Room to Grow—caring for children and women, mothers and fathers in the same position [that I was in], but with no resources—was very compelling to me.

JS: What's your response to people who criticize actors for using their fame to push a social agenda or cause?

UT: I think that's idiotic.

JS: Excellent answer. Are you the most famous Buddhist in Hollywood?

UT: I'm not even Buddhist. I was brought up by two parents who happen to be Buddhist, but I didn't have religion forced upon me. I love Buddhism, but I'm not a practicing Buddhist.

JS: Is fame worth it?

UT: That's an interesting ques- tion. I wouldn't know better because I started doing what I love to do at 16. I've now lived four years longer [with it] than I've lived without it.

JS: Do you feel gorgeous?

UT: That's silly. I'm too embar- rassed to answer that question. I feel very grateful, obviously that I've been given an oppor- tunity partially because I wa cute.

JS: Do you ever like photographs of yourself, or do they make you squirm?

UT: I'm very casual about it. It's not really who I am; it's creation, it's production, it design.

JS: You were in the first movie to get an NC-17 rating. How do you feel about film ratings?

UT: Well, I like PG movi myself. I don't like to be scare or horrified or grossed out, ar I think ratings are necessary prepare the audience for th content. I hope they're acc rate, so the audience can enj what they want to look for.

JS: Could you kick Daryl Hannah's ass in real life?

UT: I wouldn't. I'm not a ve aggressive person. She's prob bly a lot more aggressive th I am. IB

MOPSY

SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL.

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY

NOW YOU SEE IT—BEYOND NAKED

At the Museum of Science (www.mos.org) through Jan. 7, Body Worlds presents the inside-out totality of the human form. Order tickets online in advance, and allow about two hours to see the show. $24, adults; $11, members; $21, children, students and seniors.

Using a method of preservation called "plastination," Gunther von Hagens has managed to show us—with thrilling vividness—the myriad ingredients inside our bodies, usually known only through symptoms, rumbles and doctors' pronouncements. But here, dramatically displayed in gorgeously lifelike poses—shooting an arrow, biking—are whole, real bodies. You see the strong drama of meatily striated pink muscles flexing away, and glory in your own gym prowess. Vividly visible: the giant compacted yardage of the intestines, the knotty, anxious-looking spaghetti of the nerves and all those ingeniously packed organs that work for us night and day. Variations like "Drawer Man" pull out different body parts for easier viewing and a sense of their proximities; others "explode" the body to show more layers at once, for clearer viewing. The intricately lacy displays of blood vessels are like beautiful artwork we carry around invisibly, and the superlong spinal column in a display case looks like some mythic, swordlike declaration of our inner solidity, staking out our place on Earth. Display cases give other vistas of organs, most notably the nearly barbecue-black lungs of a smoker; health, sickness, and metallic repair (knee replacements, heart valves) are variously shown. Creepy? No, beautiful.

PARALLEL PLAY

Now across the street from its former location, Oilily (32 Newbury St., Boston; 617-247-2386; www.oililyusa.com) sells colorful clothing for both children and grownups.

Once the shop sold stylishly playful clothes just for children, but now a hop onto the Oilily pad also offers that look to adventuresome, color-and-layers-loving mothers. The trademark feeling and palette are a sweetly subdued shade down from bright-bright, a tad autumnal and often dappled with flowers. There's also something of the arty-peasant look here, with skirts brimming with several layers, laces and petticoats. Different parts of a skirt can range, discursively, from one fabric to another, as if telling a rambling, interesting tale. Those fabrics might include mohair, wool, cotton or silk, and very likely will have flowers embroidered here and there, ribbony stripes or even very subtle sequins. And to that richness, the current collection adds an Asian influence, like the color red and subtle, dreamy leaf designs. There's also the comfiest of sexy looks: the wrap dress, whose warmth suggests that its wearer is also a warm person. One sweater coat here can be gotten into backwards, to become, ingeniously, an elegant shoulder-wrapping piece for making a head-held-high entrance. Other dresses ar reversible and include panels that can be flipped cleverly. Oilily's child-to-adult span brings joyfulness t all ages, as does the friendly help you get while shopping.

CARTOON DARKNESS, CARTOONIST CHEER

Chas Addams: A Cartoonist's Life* is a biography of the famous cartoonist by Linda H. Davis of Harvard, Mass.

You'll doubtless be surprised by the charm and affec tionate nature of this mostly un-dark man, wh put gloom into that Victorian mansion and rainy day into the souls of Morticia, Gome Lurch, Wednesday and Uncle Fester. That's th Addams family of New Yorker cartoon fame, an later TV and movies. Charlie was a sport car nut, crossbow aficionado, dog lover and, novelist Kurt Vonnegut put it, "possessor of l minous innocence" who brought avuncular mi chief and hilarity to children and stepchildre though he wasn't a father himself. But the mai and enduring, dark side to his life was his secon of two wives named Barbara. Although she le him for another man, Barbara No. 2 stretch her greedy claws into his financial affairs f decades—long after he had remarried—targe ing both his cartoon-related earnings and h (surprisingly cheery-looking) dwellings. Whi maintaining a false syrupy affection for Adda Barbara "continued to lie, telling wild, nonse sical, cruel stories in private, designed to ma her look like a virginal victim." Was this h sweetness gone awry, or some subterrane need to be dominated by Barbara, the hum worm that crawled out into his sardonic c toons? Whatever the psyche-to-talent interpl Addams' cartoons warm our hearts, perversely.

RAISING THE BAR

Brookline's Beacon Street Tavern elevates pub fare to new heights.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

Cabernet-braised lamb shank

Occupying a homely block of Beacon Street at the east end of Brookline, the Beacon Street Tavern nevertheless provides an oasis for good eating and drinking at prices that are kind to the wallet. Owned by the same folk who run the Washington Square Tavern farther west, Beacon Street carves out a more upscale niche, opting for cuisine that seems more ambitious and sophisticated than the comfort food on which its Washington Square sibling focuses. Perhaps the assertive spicing of Beacon Street's food makes it less "comfortable" than its western sibling, but it also makes it more adventurous and interesting.

For example, Beacon Street's crab cakes ($9), which came with a dark brown, crunchy, fried-panko coating, were liberally laced with hot chili. As a result, any recognizable crab flavor in their moist interior had been obscured. Still, the dish proved delightful, with a cooling avocado salsa accompaniment whose creamy texture and mellow, distinctive flavor were punctuated by soft, tiny nuggets of something delightfully crunchy. Dollops of spicy aioli added a tart counterpoint. Truffled cauliflower bisque ($6) arrived lukewarm, but its rich, earthy taste, combined with the accompanying sesame crostini's satisfying crispness and the chive oil's intriguing aroma, added character that compensated for its tepid temperature. Better, and appropriately hot, was a bowl of roasted butternut squash bisque ($7). Lovely in appearance, its golden hue serving as a dramatic backdrop for a splash of snow-white softly whipped cream, the bisque delivered rich and sweet, but not cloying, flavor. A generous serving of the uncharacteristically tender grilled calamari ($9) came with what the menu called "white bean puttanesca," luscious, garlicky legumes cooked to perfect al dente texture and enlivened with nuggets of pancetta and basil oil.

An appetizer of shaved Parma prosciutto ($9), sweet, grainy figs and refreshingly cool melon—both cantaloupe and honeydew—came in a presentation worthy of the most dedicated culinary artist. Three generous slices of rich, fatty, mildly salty prosciutto from Emilia Romagna came arranged astride the low cylinder formed by the fruit, with high-octane aged balsamic drizzled alongside. In a comparable eye-catching presentation, roasted red and yellow beet timbale ($9) consisted of a compact cylinder of beets topped with sweet pecans and salty Stilton cheese. The different shades of sweetness contributed by the beets and pecans, contrasting with the sharp, dry cheese, would've been perfect were the beets not cut into cubes too small to preserve their texture. On one evening, I ordered a side of grilled asparagus ($3.50) as a starter and was rewarded with a generous plate of remarkably flavorful (for the season) asparagus spears grilled perfectly al dente. Unfortunately, a ginger soy dressing detracted from rather than enhanced this simple preparation—the wrong flavor in the wrong place at the wrong time. A fresh squeeze of lemon juice or a simple lemony hollandaise would've better complemented this herbaceous treat.

Moving beyond the starters, from the grilled "platters" category of the menu I ordered the barbecued turkey tips ($14) one night, and the sirloin tips ($17) on a subsequent night. Remarkably tasty, the turkey tips consisted of hunks of turkey breast glazed with a sweet-honey-barbeque sauce and grilled to a charred, caramelized exterior that sealed in their succulence and flavor, which was made memorable by a mixture of Eastern spices (cumin, coriander and cardamom, among others). The sirloin tips, hefty cuts of full-flavored beef, had been marinated in soy and grilled over a hot fire, making them tender, juicy and flavorful.

Mushroom and vegetable scampi ($17) featured al dente spaghetti sauced with a delicious combination of woodsy wild mushrooms, meaty tomatoes, crunchy asparagus tips, yellow and green squash and purple onions, and topped with pleasantly salty pecorino Romano cheese and fresh basil. House-made Bolognese ($17), a mountain of fresh, al dente pasta dressed with a luxuriously meaty sauce redolent of garlic and Italian herbs, also came enriched with pecorino Romano cheese. Seared sea scallops ($22) produced seven or eight large, sweet, velvety-textured scallops with more of the unseasonable but first-rate asparagus that kept turning up like a good penny. A second seafood offering, sole Milanese ($22), demonstrated a degree of care in the kitchen that belied Beacon Street's "tavern" moniker. Sole is a delicate fish, whose texture can be put at risk by even a slight misstep. Beacon Street's sole, bathed in egg and lightly breaded, arrived perfectly cooked and sauced with a light, lemony butter. An accompaniment of delicious orzo pasta delightful in both taste and texture and was punctuated by crisp and crunchy vegetable fragments.

Cabernet-braised lamb shank ($22), intensely flavorful and fork tender, would've been an unqualified winner had it not suffered from a clichéd presentation propped up against a mammoth mound of mashed potatoes. Finally, pan-roasted beef tenderloin tornado ($23) could've held its own in the toniest and priciest of steak houses. This large, thick slice of beef tenderloin, glazed with a port marinade and grilled medium-rare to a tender, juicy text me topped with a sprinkling of crisp, ed, ultrathin onions. Broccolini, small ads with slender, tender stalks of bright en broccoli, made the perfect garnish. he oversized and obtrusive mountain of ashed potatoes, however, while a fair exmplar of that genre, proved the old adage at more is less. A side order of thinly ed sweet potato fries, hot, fresh and irretible, served in a tall square container 3.50 as a side but included with the turkey d sirloin tips), was so terrific that the tchup that accompanied them seemed an ult to the chef.

In accordance with its express mission as avern, Beacon Street offered an array of ft beers and some credible wines. The er on tap included the popular, mildly ter English brew, Fuller's London Pride 5), a good companion to the crab cakes. crisp white Austrian wine, Loimer Lois üner Veltliner Kamptal ($6 a glass; $24 bottle), proved a good match for the mpi and scallops, with its crisp, pleasly acidic freshness and fine finish, while e dry, distinctively flavored El Tordo lbec ($9 a glass; $28 a bottle) stood up ll to the beef and turkey. Even better s the Ugo Bing 1999 Chianti Riserva, a erb, well-balanced wine, its tannins tened by age and its delightfully aroatic bouquet enhanced by decanting. sh, crusty bread baked in-house on e evenings and procured from Iggy's on others, served with soft, slightly salted butter—and on one evening, delicious hummus—provided a good vehicle with which to mop up the tasty sauces that came with a number of the dishes. The Beacon Street Tavern's frequently featured dessert, a five-layered chocolate cake ($7), rich and fudgy, boasted soft dark chocolate frosting that fused seamlessly with the cake and made the entire confection one moist, intensely chocolate triumph.

The tavern's comfortable, well-appointed interior accommodates almost 80 diners at booths and banquettes, a high chef's table and a long bar in the main room, and another 15 or so in a private room. Walls a lively shade of red, Victorian sconces and chandeliers, and a scattering of oriental carpets give the place a comfortable, eclectic, pleasantly homey look. Best of all, Beacon Street's servers brought a skill and professionalism to their performance worthy of a much more upscale venue. Well-informed and able to describe and discuss menu offerings intelligently, they accommodated our desired pacing and satisfied our particular needs (separate tasting dishes, for example) with grace and finesse. This friendly tavern, a cut above similar establishments both in its food and service, often plays to a full house, especially on weekends. Since reservations are not accepted, early arrival and/or patience are essential and well rewarded. IB

In Touch With His Innard Chef

Tony Maws guts it out at the James Beard House.

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Craigie Street's Tony Maws prepares for a trip to the James Beard House

Hold the lobster. Forget the truffles. Tony Maws, chef/owner of Craigie Street Bistrot in Cambridge, is heading to New York City to cook up dinner at the James Beard House with a van full of monkfish liver, pork jowls, gizzards, cockscombs and pig ears.

"We're a teeny little restaurant, and this is a big deal on so many levels," says Maws. "Let's do it on our own terms, show 'em what we're about." What he's about, he says, is encouraging "a greater appreciation" for small farmers and whole animals. "There's a bigger message than the shock" some diners might initially experience on encountering a pork-jowl crouton in their serrano ham consommé.

"We make things taste good," says Maws. "Cockscombs taste like the best chicken dumplings you've ever had. And fried pigs' ears… I've been eating them for a long time—braised, battered and fried. There's a good porkiness to it."

The pig ears and cockscombs are part of a country ragout that also includes sweetbreads, gizzard confit, a farm-fresh egg and Jerusalem artichoke purée. It's served after the "phenomenal" Spanish octopus and before both the crispy confit of goat and the Vermont quail stuffed with boudin noir—also known as blood sausage.

If You've Got It, Flaunt It

If you're Jeffrey Fournier, you want customers of your soon-to-open restaurant to experience ALL your talents, from woodworking design to fine arts. "I want my own paintings on the wall," he says. "I've been building the host stand, doing the woodworking thing." As chef/owner of 51 Lincoln in Newton Highlands, he's also formulating what he calls a "working menu" of about a dozen appetizers and the same number of entrées, plus a selection of pastas and risottos such as "black-and-white" risotto, flavored with Parmesan and truffles.

Most recently executive chef at The Metropolitan Club in Chestnut Hill, Fournier is harking back to his previous stint at the former Sophia's with a renewed focus on house-made liqueurs matched with "little plates." One example: hibiscus liqueur with braised shortribs, "a great way to start a meal," he says. From his Met days, Fournier has revised his much-vaunted "watermelon steak" to include what he calls "eggplant chicharrones."

Another major revision was to retrofit the space—which had housed restaurants for about 30 years—to make it handicapped-accessible for the first time. "We're building a handicapped bathroom on the first floor, and an automated electric entry for wheelchairs," he says. Which means Jeffrey Fournier is now making watermelon steak accessible for everyone. Cheers!

Carnivoyeurs, Take a Look!

There ought to be a pinup calendar for members of Savenor's Meat-of-the-Month Club. Miss January is a pheasant; February features a pair of heart-shaped tenderloins; March brings an amazing rack (of lamb) and so on, throughout the year. No, there's no edible Easter Bunny, but November's selection is the fabled Turducken (turkey stuffed with a duck stuffed with a chicken), a most festive ménage-à-meat.

Good-Byes

We're not blue about Indigo finally closing in Needham, but we'll miss Newbury Pizza on Newbury Street. Sic transit gloria mundi. IB

WINE

Galicia's Floral Gems

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

Although they're not quite in the mainstream, Spanish wines have skyrocketed in popularity in the U.S. over the past few years. While most of the attention is focused on areas with stalwart reputations for red wine, such as Rioja, Ribera del Duero and Priorat, one of the amazing things about Spain's emerging quality-wine culture is how it touches nearly every one of the country's 50-plus regions. Trips to Spain over the past decade have convinced me that the potential is there to produce some of the world's most delicious wines featuring authentic local flavors. The only barrier to greater success is familiarity. In a market increasingly dominated by a handful of well-known varietals, Spain's native grapes are, by and large, obscure to Americans. Its regions are largely mysterious and unknown. Still, there is a general well-placed confidence among wine lovers that any Spanish wine they encounter at their favorite retail shop or restaurant will represent outstanding quality and value.

So far, the country's red wines have elicited most of the enthusiasm. But Spain also features a rich tapestry of unique indigenous white grapes capable of producing highly aromatic, beautifully textured wines. None of them is accorded higher prestige locally or internationally than the brilliantly perfumed albariño grape originating in Galicia in the country's cool, windswept Atlantic northwest. Rias Baixas, the subregion within Galicia that produces most of the best albariño, has emerged as the country's signature white wine district. While not easy to pronounce (REE-us BAY-shus), the wine is considered by its fans to be quintessential with shellfish. The only thing, besides lack of familiarity, holding it back from broader popularity: price. It can be expensive to grow grapes in this area, so vineyard yields tend to be lower than elsewhere in Spain, necessitating a premium cost to the consumer. So I was extremely pleased during a recent blind tasting to find the following group of highly recommended bargain albariños from Rias Baixas, each of which was fresh and charming and would make a delightful companion to a shrimp cocktail or dish of mussels Provençal. The wines are listed in ascending order of preference, but they're all outstanding, and ranking them would simply be splitting hairs. Don't, however, buy anything older than 2005; ageability is not one of albariño's virtues, and all of the older wines we tasted gave an impression, frankly, of being old.

Morgadio Albariño, Rias Baixas, 2005, $18. An estate-bottled wine from one of the most famous of the producers, Morgadio's albariño entices with its delicately herb- and smoke-accented, floral aromas. With a refreshingly juicy green apple fruitiness, this vigorously dry wine strikes me as a superb choice for salty, briny seafood dishes, including fried clams.

Don Olegario Albariño, Rias Baixas, 2005, $20. This estate-bottled albariño is made at a small vineyard overlooking the Atlantic Ocean and, like most of the other wines in the tasting, is aged for an extended time on the yeast lees prior to bottling without any wood contact. Intensely floral, with peach and slightly tropical passion fruit aromas, it's the richest of the wines I tasted but with enough great bracing acidity to balance the texture. This is a wine that would stand up beautifully to Alaskan king crab.

Condes de Albarei Albariño, Rias Baixas, 2005, $13. Produced at one of the region's large cooperative wineries, this slightly spritzy wine shows a perfume of sweet herbs and peaches. It's pleasingly tart and quite ripe at the same time, with a green, slightly bitter edge in the finish that's reminiscent of lime. This spicy, anise-accented wine would be a great choice to offset the mild sweetness of grilled scallops.

Laxas Albariño, Rias Baixas, 2005, $15. This group favorite was my second choice, but just by a hair. Produced by one of the venerable old families of the region at a bodega just north of the Portuguese border, Laxas left the driest impression of any of the albariños. Dry, with prominent tart lemon flavors, it's a classy wine that has some of the finesse normally associated with much more expensive bottlings. Subtly mingled herb, mineral and apple essences mark the aroma, and the body is a bit richer than most I've tasted in this moderate price range, with a beautiful spicy note on the finish. It's an ideal choice with simply prepared herb-accented sole or halibut.

Burgans Albariño, Rias Baixas, 2005, $12. The best wine in my opinion, a real stunner, was the least pricey of the group. If you like this style, Burgans has to qualify as a steal. Originating at the Martin Codax winery, which is one of the region's largest and best known, this wine has an enticing orange, peach and floral aroma. Moderate in alcohol, it holds together in delicious tension the two elements that make all the albariños so appealing: brilliant fruit flavor and a smooth texture. Clean, juicy and tingling with ripe green apple and lime accents, the explosive citrus sensation lingers long after you've swallowed this. If you're having ceviche, you have to buy this. IB

Museums and Galleries: Gardner, Gratis

Nursing your hangover on the couch all day is so 2006. It's 2007 now, so get your new year off to a fortuitous start at the Isabella Stewart Gardner museum for the annual First Day Free. In honor of former board member Frank Hatch, the museum waives the usual $12 dollar admission, welcoming visitors for one last view of the holiday garden display in the courtyard. The event also features a special exhibition that runs through Jan. 14, A Bronze Menagerie: Mat Weights of Early China, showcasing small animal bronzes dating as far back as 200 BC. (Families with curious kids can use a guide to hunt down the rest of the animals scattered throughout the museum.) Saving money and seeing more art—resolutions don't get better than that. Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, 280 The Fenway, Boston (617-566-1401). www.gardnermuseum.org. —LPK

Performing Arts: Merry Elfin Christmas

For most of us, the Christmas season is one of celebration and happiness, but for one elf working in Santaland at Macy's in New York City, it was a nightmare. That elf was David Sedaris, and his Santaland Diaries have been a hit ever since he released them over the NPR airwaves back in 2000. The New Repertory Theatre revives its production of Sedaris' holiday memoir, as local thespian and playwright John Kuntz—who won a 2002 Independent Reviewers of New England award for his portrayal of Crumpet the Elf—reprises his role for the Watertown-based theater. During the one-man show, Crumpet deals with the ups and downs of a dysfunctional Christmas in Santaland, including run-ins with obnoxious patrons, working with motley Santas and the sexual tension amongst elves. *Black Box at the Arsenal Center for the Arts, 321 Arsenal St., Watertown (617-923-8487). www.newrep.org. CityScope: Autographs in the Alley

The Red Sox might've had a hell of a time signing Daisuke Matsuzaka, but at New Stars for Young Stars, they won't have any problems signing you—or at least signing for you. Sox pitchers Curt Schilling, Jonathan Papelbon, Craig Hansen and Manny DelCarmen are all scheduled to appear at Jillian's for this second annual event, which features an assortment of bowling contests, a silent auction and a sports memorabilia sale, all to benefit the Jimmy Fund. Tickets for the event—which will also pay tribute to Sox pitcher Jon Lester, who was diagnosed with non-Hodgkin's lymphoma last summer—run $99 to $169, with the highest price earning you a S game jersey and a premium position toward the front of the autograph line. Jillian Boston, 145 Ipswich St., Boston. www.jimmyfund.org/news-stars. 11:30 am-1 pm. $ $169. —RL

Music: The Anti–New Year's Gala

Sure, you could throw down a coupla benjamins, squeeze into some formalwear and duke it out with the rest of the champagne-swilling revelers at any of the countless New Year's shindigs around town. Or you could lace up your sneakers and head over to Cambridge to hear some of this year's most badass local bands at the Middle East. Downstairs, pop-rockers Hooray for Earth and the Snow Leopards join Bang Camaro (a year-old band inspired by '80s metal with an all-boy crew of 12 singers and five instrumentalists) for $15, while roots rockers Will Dailey & the Rivals play upstairs for $25. With all the money you're saving, you can splurge on a bottle of Veuve, and ring in the new year right. 472 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-492-9181). 8 pm. Upstairs: $25; Downstairs: $15. —LPK

A Riveting Children

Cuarón's sci-fi thriller bears remarkable fruit.

BY SEAN BURNS

Quite simply a staggering achievement, Alfonso Cuaron's Children of Men is the kind of movie you only thought they didn't make anymore. A ruthless, angrily politicized piece of speculative sci-fi that conveniently doubles as an edge-of-your-seat chase thriller, the film's dark vision of the future is also a critique of the way we're living right now. As with the best sci-fi, the film feels more topically and emotionally keyed into our current, uneasy cultural moment than any present-tense tale possibly could.

It's 2027, and women mysteriously stopped having babies roughly 18 years ago. Seeing the end in sight, civilization has collapsed into mayhem and ruin. Only England remains inhabitable, thanks in no small part to some jack-booted, head-busting fascism, which, as we see in the film's nerve-jangling opening sequence, still can't quite contain a violent, desperate population that understands all too well that the species is doomed, so nobody has anything to lose.

Clive Owen and Julianne Moore forge an unlikely alliance in Cuarón's bleak future.

Clive Owen stars as Theo Faron, a former activist turned hapless drunkard, muttering bitterly through city bombings and riot-rocked streets. Theo's only solace comes from weekend trips to a farm owned by his old pal Jasper, once a political cartoonist and now a drug dealer, portrayed in a warmly winning performance by Michael Caine, who here seems to be approximating how John Lennon might've acted in this role.

But one day Theo gets a rather rude wake-up call from his old flame Julian (Julianne Moore), who in the years since their split has become the leader of a rebel revolutionary group currently fighting for immigrants' rights in this border-sealed Blighty. (Just one of the movie's many blunt topical jabs: England's government now blames everything on the scourge of illegal aliens.) Julian needs to find somebody she can trust, as her treacherous gang just happens to be hiding the world's first pregnant woman in darn near two decades (played by the exceptional Claire-Hope Ashitey), and there are just too many heavily armed folks with too many violent, differing agendas for the miracle mom to be safe in London anymore.

It's probably unfair to give away much more, as Children of Men derives most of its seismic power from sudden shocks and left-field plot reversals that managed to induce gasps even in screening room full of jaded, seen-it-all film critics.

But it's safe to discuss Cuarón's extraordinary technique, and the unprecedented methods he uses to ground this futuristic parable firmly in the here and now. A filmmaker with such diverse interests that he helmed both the randy sex romp Y Tu Mamá También and the third Harry Potter movie, Cuarón has here brilliantly decided to scrap every last bit of cinematic grammar we've come to associate with the sci-fi genre over the years.

Children of Men was photographed using only available light, by the already legendary young cinematographer Emmanuel Lubezki, in a succession of jaw-droppingly long, unbroken takes. So many movies quick-cut their way into a false sense of excitement that there's something hypnotic, and maybe even a little bit unnerving, about watching entire scenes play themselves out in such fluid, elegantly choreographed movements.

You won't find a conventional master shot in this entire picture, and none of the show-offy computer-generated vistas that most filmmakers can't help but indulge themselves in when creating a future world. The incredibly dense and detailed production design is glimpsed only in fragments, as our point of view is typically fixed low to the ground, down in the muck and rot with Owen's Theo while he slogs through this ungodly mess.

Cuarón similarly invents startlingly new ways to stage action sequences, including one harrowing set piece during which his camera seems to circle inside, out of, and then all the way around a speeding, bullet-riddled car, somehow unimpeded by the laws of physics. Even more telling is a daring predawn escape that shakes off every movie cliché in the book.

From a distance we can barely glimpse our heroes in a stalled-out junkbox, rolling ever so slowly down a hill, pursued by running gunmen who are quickly catching up. Cuarón doesn't just resist the natural urge to get in closer, he also ignores the heightened sound-effects and "oomph-oomph" music cues that would be de rigueur for any lesser director. All we can hear is the haunting chirps of morning birds, and, as such, the scene becomes almost too suspenseful to bear.

Boasting explicit visual references to everything from Abu Ghraib, to the Nativity, to Pink Floyd's Animals album cover, Children of Men offers no shortage of reckless and exciting provocations, and yet it's still somehow unthinkable without the slow thaw of Clive Owen's extraordinary Humphrey Bogart performance. A prickly, whiskey-soaked misanthrope slowly rediscovering depths of compassion and valor that he forgot he ever had, Theo undergoes an ideological rebirth meant to mirror the possible salvation of humanity itself, which is a pretty tall order for any actor to fill. Owen manages to pull it off, with a minimum of fuss and zero actorly histrionics.

It's something of a miracle. But then again, so is this movie. iB

Babel ★★½
Brilliantly assembled, strikingly well-acted and, afte awhile, just about impossible to take seriously, th latest collaboration between director Alejandr González Iñárritu and screenwriter Guillermo Ar riaga is an exquisitely crafted exercise in audienc abuse that grows more outlandish and tiresome wit each passing reel. Like their previous films, Amor Perros and 21 Grams, Babel takes three seemingly un related stories and slowly reveals hidden connection between strangers united in tragedy. This relentless downbeat meditation on misfortune stars Brad Pi and Cate Blanchett as a disaster-prone America couple on vacation in Morocco, with loosely relate tales of woe rippling across the globe in the wake their unhappiness. Iñárritu is a tremendously visua stylist, and the astonishing segment about a de pressed deaf-mute teenage girl (Rinko Kikuchi) liv ing in Japan stands as some of this year's most power ful and evocative filmmaking. But Babel never know when to say when. Arriaga's script just keeps pilin calamities on top of catastrophes until the film even tually becomes more numbing than affecting. A litt levity, or even a bit of restraint, would've gone a lon way. (In the suburbs.)

Blood Diamond ★★
Director Edward Zwick, who started out as a cocr ator of the TV show Thirtysomething before movin into bloated, preachy spectacles such as Cour Under Fire and The Last Samurai, makes actio movies for guilty liberals. Trying to swaddle his u lentless message-mongering in slick, Hollywoo clichés, Zwick often comes up with the worst both worlds: big budget adventures that grind to halt every 10 minutes to lecture you. Blood Di mond should've been a corker, as the Sierra Leo diamond massacres of the late 1990s are rich wi cinematic possibilities, and Leonardo DiCaprio delivers a surprisingly convincing, charismatic perfo mance as a scummy smuggler taking advantage noble mine slave (Djimon Hounsou, who h played so many slaves in movies since starring Amistad, he could probably perform Roots as a on man show by now) to chase a pink diamond size of a golf ball. Alas, Zwick squanders th promising setup with a devastating lack of forwa momentum. Every scene runs at least twice as lo as it needs to, and Zwick's pompous, self-conscious prestigious tone negates the storyline's gritty u gency. (At Boston Common, Fenway, and in t suburbs.)

Bobby ★½
If the words "written and directed by Emilio E tevez" don't already inspire enough derisive chu les, the absurdly celebrity-stuffed cast list will cl the deal. Chronicling all sorts of banal events at t Ambassador hotel on June 6, 1968, Estevez sho horns seemingly every last one of his famous frien into a bustling, largely pointless soap opera taki place in the hours before RFK's assassination. Hil ous in part because of its pleadingly sincere to this very shallow and silly film has almost nothing do with the title character and everything to with washed-up, former movie stars grasping comeback straws. Watch Christian Slater be racist! Then Sharon Stone cries. Then Helen Hu cries. Then Heather Graham cries. Then Josh Jackson cries. Then Lindsay Lohan cries. Then thony Hopkins stands around in the lobby mu bling. Your own mileage may vary, but my perso low-point came during drunken lounge-singer De Moore's slurry torch-ballad rendition of "Lo Louie." Estevez seems to think he's saying someth here about lost idealism, but Bobby feels more lik very special episode of The Love Boat that ends w a presidential candidate getting shot. lid off secret bigotries in order to air them out as rancid stupidity. Whittled down from a mountain of footage into a breathlessly paced locomotive under the expert supervision of director Larry Charles, there's no piety left untweaked or prejudice left unexposed over the course of these 82 riotous minutes. I dearly look forward to repeat viewings, just so I can watch it without having to pick my jaw up off the floor at every turn. (In the suburbs.)

Casino Royale ★★★½
A bruising, extremely satisfying reboot for the ailing James Bond franchise, this is 007's Batman Begins. Don't look for any invisible cars, bad double-entendres or conveniently talkative supervillains angling for world domination here, as this stripped-down prequel deliberately avoids the bloated campiness that bogged down Pierce Brosnan's desultory efforts. Rediscovering the character's roots via the first of Ian Fleming's novels, Casino Royale follows our still wet-behind-the-ears secret agent on a twisty, violent maiden mission involving some shady terrorists and stock-market manipulators, along with the usual exotic locales, luxury cars and staggeringly beautiful women. Everything about this 007 feels a lot leaner and a good deal meaner than we've come to expect in recent decades. The close-quartered violence is messy and leaves a mark, but most importantly, James Bond feels not just human, but vital again, thanks in no small part to a bravura performance from Daniel Craig. He emerges as the brutish, brokenhearted 007 for our times, appropriately tougher and sadder than the preceding incarnations. Welcome back, Mr. Bond. It's been too long. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Déjà Vu ★★½
In this agreeable-enough time waster from producer Jerry Bruckheimer and director Tony Scott, Denzel Washington coasts on his easygoing movie-star cool as a whip-smart ATF agent investigating a grisly New Orleans ferryboat bombing. It isn't long before he's recruited by Val Kilmer's secretive government operative to join an elite task force entrusted with running our country's first time machine. All sorts of pseudoscientific, somewhat arbitrary mumbo-jumbo ensues, but if you're willing surrender any shred of logic and just play along with the film, there are some mildly nifty pleasures to be found, including what we must assume is the first ever car chase during which our hero remains both 10 feet and four days behind the villain. Washington is the most effortlessly engaging actor in movies right now, and his charm bounces nicely off costars Kilmer, Adam Goldberg and fetching newcomer Paula Patton. In a sly bit of subversive stunt casting, Passion of the Christ star Jim Caviezel delivers a terrifying turn as a psycho Timothy McVeigh type. This is all fairly forgettable stuff, but you could do a lot worse. (In the suburbs.)

Dreamgirls ★★½
All razzle-dazzle and very little soul, writer-director Bill Condon's breathlessly anticipated (and even more breathlessly paced) adaptation of the beloved Broadway musical frantically flings itself from one show-stopping number into another, never settling down long enough for us to become emotionally invested. A muck-racking alternate history of Motown, Dreamgirls stars Beyoncé Knowles as a Diana Ross-ish diva bumped to the forefront of a Supremes-esque group by one Machiavellian Berry Gordy clone (Jamie Foxx, surprisingly inert here). Former American Idol contestant Jennifer Hudson belts out the show's signature song, "And I'm Telling You I'm Not Going," with an earth-shattering set of pipes, but her performance seems to shut down and go blank whenever she's not called upon to sing. The largely novice cast lacks the force of personality required to breathe life into these stock figures, save for an electrifying Eddie Murphy, who dominates every moment he's onscreen as a self-destructive James Brown/Marvin Gaye composite. Condon rushes headlong through the decades with such a bare minimum of characterization, this toe-tapping crowd-pleaser feels curiously empty. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

For Your Consideration ★½
It's been a long time since Waiting for Guffman, and director Christopher Guest's once disarming semi-improvised mockumentaries have been growing a bit thinner and lazier with every passing installment. For Your Consideration marks a dour dead end for Guest's creative partnership with Eugene Levy, as well as repertory troupe members Catherine O'Hara, Harry Shearer, Michael McKean and Parker Posey. This tiresome Tinseltown tell-all goes behind the scenes of a perfectly dreadful-looking independent film entitled Home for Purim, scoring plenty of unpleasant cheap shots once the Hollywood hype machine starts touting the has-been (and never-was) cast as Oscar bait. The gags are mostly inside baseball, aimed at folks familiar with the movie biz, save for Guest's odd belief that Jewishness is and of itself inherently hilarious. This is a sour, mean-spirited movie about small, selfish people, wringing uncomfortable laughs from their endless humiliation. It's ironic that, after all these years, Guest has finally made the movie that Waiting for Guffman's detractors wrongly accused it of being: an ugly mockery of medium talents, ridiculing them for being foolish enough to have dreams. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Good German ★★½
Prolific director Steven Soderbergh tends to alternate studio blockbusters like Erin Brockovich and the Ocean's caper series with strange little low-budget experiments like this glum, downbeat murder-mystery set in post–World War II Berlin. The trick here isn't just that the picture is set in 1945, but that Soderbergh actually set about making it as if it were, indeed, still 1945. Using black-and-white film stock, antique fixed-focal length lenses, primitive sound recording, high-contrast noir lighting, rear-projection special effects and every other retro-gimmick in the book, The Good German is an aesthetic feast for classic movie buffs. It's hard not to adore Soderbergh's loving homages to Casablanca and The Third Man, and the oversized pre-Method performances by George Clooney and Cate Blanchett are indeed a treat. Unfortunately, the underlying material (adapted by Paul Attanasio from Joseph Kanon's novel) is exceedingly grim and unpleasant, leaving a bitter aftertaste. Even more problematic is Soderbergh's decision to ramp up the sex and violence, littering the dialogue with wall-to-wall profanity. Such ill-advised contemporary flourishes shatter the movie's smoky, traditional spell. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Happy Feet ★★★
Director George Miller, the demented crackpot visionary who brought us both The Road Warrior and Babe: Pig in the City, has done it again with wh by far the darkest, weirdest computer-anim talking-animal movie musical you're ever goi see. Elijah Wood lends his voice to a misfit y penguin born a little bit different and thereby u to participate in any of those bizarre mating ri we all witnessed in that hit documentary last mer. Strange how March of the Penguins left ou part where the flightless birds all sing jukebox c to one another. Cast out of society by the stringe ligious order governing his starving tribe, W fluffy, tap-dancing sprite discovers the giant, m ing outside world, and eventually receives a he lesson in the cause-and-effect chain of environm pollution. Happy Feet smuggles tons of coded pr sive messages in between the dazzling song-and-d numbers, "virtually choreographed" using m capture techniques by the sensational Savion G There's a strong conservation moral here, as wel few swift kidney punches to our current reli versus-science debate. Please note: Half a sta been subtracted due to Robin Williams' unfunn fensive voice-over work as all the "ethnic" ani (In the suburbs.)

The Holiday ★½
The beaming, beatific presence of Kate Wins just about the only thing that doesn't induce sea in writer-director Nancy Meyers' latest possibly shrillest, romantic comedy. Winslet as a dowdy, brokenhearted wedding reporter swaps homes for the holidays with Cameron grating, recently dumped, Type-A movie-ma ing exec. Wouldn't you know it, they both m to stumble upon their soul mates! Diaz hoo with Jude Law, who has a few good scenes loutish lothario before Myers backs off and qu blands him out into a sickeningly wholesome ily man. The less fortunate Winslet ends up matronly upper arms of Jack Black, here desperately to be a sensitive leading man an barrassing both himself and the audience process. ood deal more amusing and sympathetic than might expect, director Stephen Frears' catty, be- l-closed-doors saga of royal protocol in the wake rincess Diana's death boasts an impeccably pre- performance by Helen Mirren, a model of re- nt and understatement. As HRM Elizabeth II, en is the embodiment of stiff-upper-lip British rve, allowing us only fleeting glimpses of her r turmoil while the monarchy is rocked by pub- utrage during that weird week of hysterical, dwide grieving. Michael Sheen does a fine job rime Minister "Call Me Tony" Blair, attempting sher in an era of "regular guy" modernity and ectly gauging that Her Majesty's private, digni- responses will simply not cut the mustard in such sad, unprecedented circumstances. Peter Morgan's screenplay sneaks questions about tradition, obsolescence and celebrity worship in between the very funny lines, and James Cromwell steals the show with an unfiltered take on Prince Philip. The Queen stumbles over some unfortunate symbolism involving a 14-point stag on the grounds of Balmoral, but Mirren's sterling self-control saves even the soppiest scenes. My goodness, the things this lady can convey with a single eyebrow! (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Rocky Balboa ★★½

Sentimental attachments go a long way towards redeeming Sylvester Stallone's sixth, comically tardy outing as everybody's favorite punch-drunk palooka. In other words, if you don't have fond memories of growing up with the earlier flicks, this one is going to feel like torture. Aimed expressly at old fans, Sly's valedictory to his signature character is stuffed to the sprocket holes with mawkish inspirational speeches and sledgehammer nostalgia. Depressed and down on his luck after the death of his beloved wife, Adrian, the Italian Stallion dons those trunks yet again for one final bout, taking on sleazy, spoiled hotshot Mason "The Line" Dixon (real-life former Light Heavyweight champ Antonio Tarver) for a publicity-stunt exhibition match. Embarrassingly personal, Rocky Balboa is more like a forum for writer-director Stallone to share some heartfelt, long-winded musings about his own ruined career and panicked fear of obsolescence. It isn't really defensible at all, but there's also something sort of sweet and endearing about its naked, goofy sincerity. Even if Sly has never quite figured out how to direct an actual movie, I daresay there's still nobody better at assembling one hell of a rousing, stand-up-and-cheer training montage. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Volver ★★★

The title translates as "To Return," a concept that echoes in several sneaky ways throughout Pedro Almodóvar's relaxed, casually complex movie. Penélope Cruz has never been better than she is in this twisted homage to Spanish telenovelas and Douglas Sirk melodramas. The plot is too complex and upside down to even begin trying to explain, but what you'll be most struck by is Almodóvar's sheer, unabashed adoration of women. The movie has a rich, feminine glow to it. Almost all of the scenes take place while Pedro's women are preparing food, styling each other's hair or somehow nurturing one another. There's something almost primal about Almodóvar's vision of females as healers and caregivers—their community's life force. Though a bit overplotted and overlong, this is a very sweet film; a love letter to the kindness and resilience of ladies everywhere. (In Kendall Square.)

The High Notes of 2006

'Tis the season for year-end lists and last-minute holiday gifts. Below is a highly opinionated guide to the year's most interesting CDs—and concert DVDs worthy of note.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

CDs

Bob Dylan, Modern Times (Columbia). The ageless wonder boy caps a comeback trifecta, settling into a warm, accessible roots groove with his well-worn voice oozing wit and wile.

Arctic Monkeys, Whatever People Say I Am, That's What I'm Not (Domino). Not one of the greatest British albums ever as hyped, but certainly a bracing standout for 2006. These Monkeys swing and bite with post-punk savvy, propelled by Alex Turner's pithy portrayals of Midlands malaise.

Neko Case, Fox Confessor Brings the Flood (Anti). The alt-country siren explores new waters, casting her resonant voice in atmospheric songs of mythology and romance, with Calexico and the Band's Garth Hudson in kindred support.

TV on the Radio, Return to Cookie Mountain (Interscope). Brooklyn's sonic explorers scale new heights on a major-label debut that mixes samples and loops, distortion and melody, rock and doo-wop, to forge evocative collages.

Cat Power, The Greatest (Matador). Indie diva Chan Marshall finds grace and confidence for her fragile soul in Memphis, refreshing her melancholy with help from Al Green sidemen.

Sierra Leone's Refugee All Stars, Living Like a Refugee (Anti). Born of flight from violent civil war, but alive with hope, this African collective evokes the buoyant sound and social justice of Bob Marley in its infectious songs.

Cassandra Wilson, Thunderbird (Blue Note). Producer T-Bone Burnett helps the singer sharpen her lush blend of jazz and Delta blues with crisp, subtle shades of hip-hop and funk.

Rosanne Cash, Black Cadillac (Capitol). Far from a simple tribute to her late father, Johnny, this somewhat dark, metaphor-rich disc burrows into memories and meditations on loved ones who pass through this world and stay in touch.

The Hold Steady, Boys and Girls in America (Vagrant). Indie-lectual goes classic rock. If one can get past the '70s Springsteen–meets–Thin Lizzy trappings, there's sure ballast in Craig Finn's tart tales of youthful confusion.

Tom Waits, Orphans (Anti). A three-disc set of rarities and new songs, covering the range of the raw singer's eccentric Americana, split between his bluesy "brawlers," poignant "bawlers" and bizarre "bastards" (including monologues).

Concert DVDs

My Morning Jacket, Okonokos (ATO/RCA). Kentucky's finest bring their epic, reverb-tinged rock to the stage with a spooky forest backdrop—and superimposed animal fantasy for bookends.

Coachella* (Golden Voice/Anti). America's first answer to Europe's mega-festivals, held in the California desert. Rock to rave to rap, with songs from Radiohead, the Flaming Lips (Wayne Coyne crowd-surfing in a bubble), the Red Hot Chili Peppers, Björk, the White Stripes and the Mars Volta.

The Black Crowes, Freak 'n' Roll (Eagle Vision). Before this year's personnel changes for the refried Southern rockers, the classic lineup is captured in its glory at a 2005 show complete with an acoustic miniset and horns.

Kiss, Kissology Vol. 1 (VH1 Classic). Four concerts from a hard-rock phenomenon in mid-'70s prime (before the circus-like cliché got old) are way too much for guilty-pleasure curiosity. But mainstream TV interviews and a clip on the group's 1975 visit to a Michigan small town are a hoot.

Leonard Cohen, I'm Your Man (Lion's Gate). Nick Cave, Beth Orton, Rufus Wainwright and others pay homage to the great poet-singer at an Australian concert spliced with interview reflections and one mesmerizing Cohen performance with U2.

Keith Jarrett, Tokyo Live (ECM). A novel abstraction: a virtuoso at one piano. Luckily, aside from close-ups of hands, face and feet, there's improvisational prowess in the air, particularly in a transcendent "Old Man River."

Van Morrison, Live at Montreux 1980/1974 (Eagle Vision). Vintage Van, back when he had wavy hair (and bold-print shirts in 1974) and punchy bands (showcasing Pee Wee Ellis and Mark Isham on horns in 1980). And oh, that voice!

The Best of the Jammys, Vol. 1* (Relix). An award show where everyone jams in intriguing combinations, including country star Travis Tritt with the Disco Biscuits, bluesman Buddy Guy with Phil Lesh and John Mayer, Blue Oyster Cult with Moe., and Peter Frampton with Guster and Martin Sexton.

Pixies, Live at the Paradise in Boston (Eagle Vision). These alt-rock pioneers documented their reunion in spades. This intimate 2005 hometown bash (plus fuzzy 1986 bonus footage from T.T. the Bear's) is their second DVD showcase. Or try Acoustic Live at Newport, a scenic folk-fest alternative.

Mission of Burma, Not a Photograph (MVD Visual). Fine documentary on the return of Boston's avant-punk icons after 19 years is sweetened with live bonus tracks both archival and recent (including a 2002 New York encore with Sonic Youth members and Moby). The story isn't over: Burma evolves on The Obliterati, the best local release of 2006. IB

Christmas for Horses

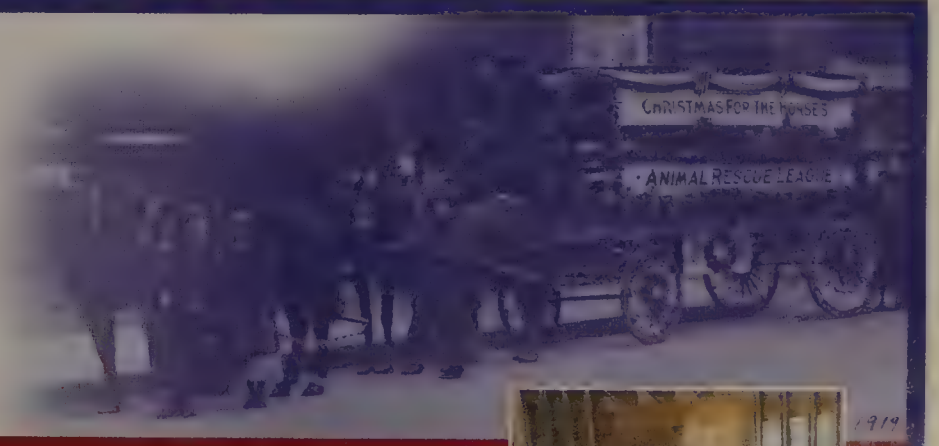
NOW CELEBRATING ITS 95TH YEAR



A heartwarming holiday tradition since 1912

Animal Rescue League of Boston

Thank you, horses

And thanks to Santa, his tiny elves and everyone who made our December 16 event at Faneuil Hall so much fun: attendees, sponsors, musicians, news media, volunteers and especially our horse guests — mounted police, park rangers, mini horses and the Anheuser-Busch Clydesdale.

Donate Christmas treats!
www.arlboston.org

Just before Christmas, the League's rescue team visits 55 regional stables, delivering treats to hundreds of hardworking service horses. Your gift makes this possible. It also helps us provide 24/7 rescue and care to all horses in need — food, blankets, bandages, rescue equipment and more. Donations may be made online or mailed to: The Animal Rescue League of Boston, 10 Chandler Street, Boston, MA 02116, tel. (617) 226-5608.

Thank you for giving generously!

Observe This

To the "Observer" in the last issue: Since you chose to share your pathetic judgment with the community, I have a message for you: Keep your uneducated opinion to yourself, or better yet, try to disappear altogether. Your life is none of my business, but the world will be a better place minus one negligent, close-minded and foolishly judgmental person like you. Your housemate may seem lonely, but at least he's not you! I hope he never showers any smiles on you.

Seven's Deadly Sins

To the No. 7 Bus: You're my punisher. As winter approaches, I'm fearful of the mornings when you pass me by, full of warm commuters. You gesture that another bus is coming. What you forget is that the next three buses will be full, too. You might as well give me the finger and take my lunch money. I walk from my bus stop to the earlier stops in hopes of making it aboard sooner; I leave behind the 15 people at my stop and come across 25 more at the previous stop. While walking, I see at least three virtually empty No. 9 buses ready to pick up anyone in their path. As time and full buses pass, I proceed to the bus stop before, still farther away from my final destination. Once I get a break and the bus stops, I get to continue to wait as your inefficient new fare machine does a full background check and eye scan before I can board. With 2007 on the horizon, we all have many things to look forward to. What I look forward to is the bus fare going from 90 cents to $1.50; you deserve a raise for all your great service. To my fellow Southie commuters, I offer you a chance to vent. E-mail me, and two weeks from now I'll send the MBTA a package of all our thoughts and concerns. Maybe together we can get to work on time and not freeze at the bus stop this winter.

Whooo Are You? Who, Who, Who, Who?

To the jackass who yelled at my friend and me to sit down during the Who concert at the Garden on Dec. 2: If you sit on your ass during "Baba O'Reilly," you shouldn't be at a Who concert to begin with. We were kind enough to relocate midshow, just so we wouldn't have to put up with you and your whiny cow of a wife. You're lucky you didn't have men in front of you to pick on, big guy, or you would've been clocked. In the words of Pete Townshend himself, "This is a rock concert, not a f---ing tea party!"

rockie horoscope

SAGITTARIUS NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

It may seem trivial, like just another thing to take care of during an already busy holiday season. However, celebrating the Sagittarius new moon can affect what happens to you not only for the rest of this year, but for all of January as well. So before you blow off this opportunity, take a moment on Dec. 20 to think about what you want purely for yourself—not for your family, not for your friends, not for the rest of humanity. Along with having prosperous Jupiter in your sign, is there something else that'll satisfy your soul?

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Like Cancer, Libra and Aries, the other cardinal signs, you can't help but respond to seasonal changes more than the rest of us do. Your internal clock is more sensitive, your priorities are more demanding, your memories more deeply embedded. So come the winter solstice and the onset of Capricorn solar energy, you could feel that you're being rejuvenated or revived. That your Saturn ruler is currently supported by Pluto's power to transform only serves to strengthen that sense of being reborn. Not so next winter.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Since Aquarius is known as the sign that looks to the future, make sure you take time on Dec. 20 to acknowledge the last new moon of the old year. It'll take place in your far-seeing Sagittarius house of hopes and wishes, social groups and professional associations. And with fortunate Jupiter in Sag for all of 2007, the 11th house is where your best chances for satisfaction and growth will spring from. This should help you handle the news that when it comes to partnership matters, more dues need to be paid.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Well, not all Fish can be named "Man of the Year" or be included on another critic's Top Ten list. But there's enough attention centered at the top of your solar chart, the place where your reputation is made, to single you out for something you've accomplished this year. Consider it a gift from the cosmos at large. As for specifics, the one that stands out (and for which you should probably take cover) is the excitement due when energetic Mars provokes unpredictable Uranus in your sign on Dec. 21. A thrill a minute.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

It may take a while before you realize that an opportunity you've been fantasizing about is going to materialize, probably before your birthday comes around. So take a minute during the Sagittarius new-moon period to imprint some of those images on your conscious mind. Then, by the time the moon becomes full, you'll be much closer to experiencing what you've been longing for. Forget about making New Year's resolutions; the first of your life-altering changes could take place as soon as Old Man Winter checks in.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Feel free to coast through the rest of the holidays, showing up if the occasion calls for your physical presence but keeping to yourself when you feel like it. The pressures brought to bear on the rest of the population somehow pass the Bull by this year. But if you do want to share in the spirit of the season and celebrate with significant others (less significant as time goes by, eh?), why not recreate a happy childhood memory? Saturn standing guard around your family tree ensures that the nutty relatives won't show up.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Even if you're on hiatus for the holidays, you won't refuse to help a colleague deal with a difficult situation at work. Just be careful around the solstice; it's difficult to predict what could happen when assertive Mars in your house of allies squares off against disruptive Uranus. But thanks to your receptive Mercury ruler, a welcome sense of stability returns in the nick of time. Come Christmas Day, you could finally get the confession you've been longing to hear. Is it a gift from the gods or the ghost of Christmas past?

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

The winter solstice can strike a familiar chord deep in the Moon Child's psyche, a reminder that fairly soon, summer—your season to shine—will be here. But for now, while the planets are congregating on the far side of the zodiac, your attention is being drawn to the people you work and play with. One may provoke your curiosity or give your creativity a boost; another could help you organize your latest project so that every aspect is adequately covered. Is it just the season, or are folks being unusually cooperative?

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

If timing is indeed everything, then for the rest of the year you're one lucky Lion. This holiday season is notable because of the cornucopia of powerful planets in your zone of recreation and romance. Since impressive amounts of passion, intelligence and physical strength are at your disposal, seriously consider the best ways to use them. Athletes should compete where and when they can; pundits should find a soapbox to pontificate from. The same thing goes for comedians and actors. Lovers just need to be their own sweet selves.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

The prelude to Christmas can often become too jittery a time for a finely tuned Virgin. But once the sun enters Capricorn and the stabilizing earth element infiltrates the atmosphere, things calm down. There'll still be questions (when? where? who?), but you won't feel as pressured to come up with answers that suit the rest of the relatives. If you'd like to experience a transformation, take some time for yourself both Christmas Eve and Christmas Day, when your Mercury ruler aligns with respected Saturn and regenerative Pluto.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

Settling scores or making amends? For the Scales, as the old year dwindles down and you look ahead to the new, it's important to know that you've balanced the books. Although you might not see evidence yet of the luck Jupiter will bestow on you throughout 2007, you may already sense that new vistas are about to open up. Along with receiving interesting opportunities to expand your area of expertise, you're likely to travel more, acquire a new set of wheels, connect with other communicators, etc. As for love: It comes, it goes, it returns.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

Suspecting that someone's been keeping quiet about a secret is part and parcel of the Scorpio mindset. Trying to unearth it successfully, without causing embarrassment to anyone involved, is something else entirely. It seems that you've managed to squeeze yourself into a tricky position, halfway between two powerful forces represented by two notable personalities. Both of them can do you a lot of good, but you can't appear to favor one over the other. Play fair; the situation resolves itself after Christmas.

IMPROPER sightings

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Arjady Ghoukasian, president of the Nagorno-Karabakh Republic, is a smooth operator when it comes to style.

Sue Brady, Gregg Daniels, Cary Wells, Fast Freddy and Katie Mulhern took this shot at the Casa Magna resort in Cancún, Mexico. We have no idea who Magna is, but her house is pretty sick.

Stephan Schrepel was down in the Everglades where he's starring in some whacked alligator-themed remake of Weekend at Bernie's. Stephan, you've got a call on Line 1, it's Oscar.

Tia Feuerstein and Daisy Kummer checked out a hurling match in Dublin, Ireland, which we imagine could get pretty messy.

Lauren and Russ Suda, and Tom Goedeke took the IMPROPER out for some target practice at a gun club down in Salisbury, NC. Jury's still out on whether we're honored or deeply wounded.

Erin Keohane, Elizabeth Price and Jen Harding visited an active volcano in New Zealand and wore safety hats that are apparently essential to surviving a potential eruption.

PAIN IN YOUR BELLY?

Do you have chronic abdominal pain or discomfort that is accompanied by a change in your normal number of bowel movements and/or a change in the form (appearance) of your stool? If so, you might have a medical condition known as Irritable Bowel Syndrome or IBS.

We are looking for men and women with IBS to participate in a clinical research study of an investigational medication for the treatment of the abdominal pain or discomfort associated with IBS.

You may qualify for the study if you meet the following criteria:

- Between the ages of 18 and 79 years;
- Diagnosed or have been diagnosed with IBS as a result of having at least 6 months, not necessarily consecutive, in the preceding 12 months of recurrent symptoms of abdominal discomfort or pain that is:
  - Relieved with defecation,
  - Associated with a change in your typical number of bowel movements when the abdominal pain or discomfort begins, and/or
  - Associated with a change in form (appearance) of stool when the abdominal pain or discomfort begins,
- Experiencing at least moderate abdominal pain or discomfort; and
- Have undergone a flexible sigmoidoscopy or colonoscopy with normal results in the past 3 years, or are willing to undergo these procedures.

All participants in this study will receive study medication, office visits, and study-related medical procedures at no cost.
If you are interested in receiving more information, or to see if you qualify, please contact BIDMC at 617-667-0291.

Art Director

The Improper Bostonian, a biweekly, four-color city magazine, seeks a full-time, hands-on art director to execute the editorial design and oversee the production of the publication from concept through printing. Responsibilities include managing art budgets, deadlines, and workflow; working with the editorial staff and photo editor in conceptualizing and designing features, columns, and calendar sections; researching art and covers; art directing photo shoots; approving color; retouching photos; and assigning illustrations. Position reports to the editor and manages a photo editor. Qualified candidates will have six or more years of consumer magazine design experience, and at least a portion of that time will have been spent managing projects and people. Candidates must also have a thorough understanding of magazine production; superior design, organizational and leadership skills; and the ability to maintain high standards under tight deadlines. Must be proficient in Quark, Photoshop, Illustrator and InDesign. Send resume, cover letter with salary history, and samples or link to portfolio to Editor, Attn: Art director position, 142 Berkeley St., Third Floor, Boston, MA 02116, or e-mail them to editor@improper.com, with art director position in the subject line. No calls please.

INCREASE YOUR SOCIAL, BUSINESS & ROMANTIC NETWORK AT AN UPCOMING DINNER PARTY

"I just went to my first Table for Eight dinner and it was a blast! The women I met were great...attractive, fun and intelligent and the guys were actually pretty cool too. After trying the online thing and being completely "over" the bar scene I was a little apprehensive, but the whole experience was more than I expected. I'm looking forward to attending another dinner party soon!"

WHEN GUESTS DON'T WANT TO LEAVE...

How many upper-yuppies can you cram into a penthouse at the Ritz? The answer, apparently, is several hundred, as was proven when the United Way hosted a reception in the home of hedge fund titan Abner Kurtin.

What was expected to be a gathering of 100-or-so mushroomed into a sardine-can crowd of good-looking, well-dressed professionals, who enjoyed cocktails and little nibbly things while mingling and enjoying the killer views of the Common, Back Bay, Beacon Hill and downtown.

Prominent among the throng: the United Way's dashingly handsome head honcho Milton Little and his breathtaking wife, Traci Gibson Little, statuesque blonde beauty Stacey Lucchino, the impossibly chic Mary Kakas, absurdly handsome, long-lost college classmates Jeff Bellows and Mark Herman, film producer and flâneur Gregg Nourjian, astonishingly sexy real estate broker Brian Doherty, and countless others of an equally sparkly ilk.

Despite the crush, everyone seemed to enjoy themselves enormously, and the fact that there was no room to change anything but your mind did little to dampen the party's high spirits or diminish everyone's appreciation for Kurtin's undeniably kick-ass crib, which one guest described as "something straight out of Better Homes and Hangouts."

In fact, several people were trying to figure out how to move in, including Milton Little, who said to Kurtin, "My wife and I don't eat a lot or take up much room. If you let us stay, I promise you won't even notice we're here."

DRINKING IS FUNDAMENTAL...

Four years ago, it was 40 people at Barefoot Books. This year, it was 400 people at Fenway Park, when Everybody Wins—a literacy and mentoring organization that pairs professionals with school kids for one-on-one reading—held its annual fundraiser and networking event at the EMC Club.

Unmistakable among the crowd: sportscaster extraordinaire Bob Lobel, banking bigwig Dave Daglio and his wife, Kristina, architect-about-town Steve Young, advertising giant Ian Dowe, Dana-Farber development babe Anne Levine, media mogul Jimmy Young and his fiancée, Donna Star (who are planning to finally tie the knot sometime in the year 2015), the lovely Martha Lerman, prepared foods mogul Patrick DeBoever, and the toothsome triumvirate of Jennifer Wells, Robyn Avery and Jennifer Remis, to name a mere handful.

While bidding on all manner of nifty stuff in the silent auction, guests stuffed themselves on a buffet that proved there's more to eat at Fenway than franks.

VIPs, meanwhile, were offered a tour of the park's interstices, although the guide announced, "Please leave your drinks behind."

Taking a sip of her cocktail, one woman said, "I'm not quite that curious about what's behind the Green Monster."

FILE UNDER "FIRST-WORLD PROBLEMS"...

Bringing new meaning to the term "dinner and a movie," the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation hosted the 22nd annual Joey O'Donnell Film Premiere, which began with three floors of food and drink at the Atrium Mall in Chestnut Hill and continued with a sneak peek at Will Smith's new movie, The Pursuit of Happyness at the AMC Theater across the way.

The superglittery crowd included the likes of the event's founder (and father of its namesake), concessionaire Joe O'Donnell and the flawless Kathy, Hizzonah Tom Menino (making a rare appearance in the 'burbs), the almost-lifelike Governor and Mrs. Romney, talking head Mike Barnicle and his financial factotum wife, Anne Finucane, direct-mail gazillionaire Steve Belkin with his wife, Joan, and daughter, Amy, bright young things Amanda and Brendan Frank, banking behemoth Joe Campanelli and the vivacious Carolyn, king-of-the-nightlife-jungle Patrick Lyons and his queen, Kristina, megarestaurateur George Naddaff and his superfabulous daughter, Jessica, Phantom Gourmet impresario Dave Andelman, real estate titan Steve Karp, and pretty much every other power player who could be coaxed out on a Sunday night with the promise of delicious food, free-flowing booze, good company, bragging rights to having seen a movie before it opened, and open season on a movie theater concession stand.

As one guest put it, "The only thing that could make this event any better is if the parking garage wasn't such a pain in the ass. But if the worst you can say is that it's tough to find a spot for your Mercedes, I guess you're doing OK." IB
